Local News.

—School exhibition to night.

—Capt. Tom Palmer is back for the winter.

—School closes Friday for the holiday vacation.

—Hugh Donnelly brought in his pound net Monday.

—Dean Burns was over from Beaver Island this week.

—A little more snow last night. Quite good sleighing.

—J. S. Smithson and wife are in Chicago on a business trip.

—Mills Kanagy is playing cornet in Lyon & Healy's band, in Chicago.

—The firemen call attention to their ball at Bartholomew's opera hall Christmas eve.

—Encourage Superintendent Enos by crowding Lewis Grand Opera House to-night.

—Christmas entertainment and presents at the Congregational church Christmas eve.

—The school exhibition to-night will eclipse any previous effort. Let every school patron be there.

—Mrs. C. T. Boucher, now living in Georgia, was recently granted $100 of her husband's back-pension.

—Miss Bailey, of the High School staff, will spend her holiday vacation with her parents in Bessemer.

—Lyon Wood, who has been teaching in Banks, was in town Monday, and left the same day for Oshkosh, Wis.

—Mrs. S. M. See and her daughter Mamie, leave the first of next week for Canada for a few weeks visit with relatives.

—The ladies of the Congregational church will give the popular entertainment, "The Temple of Fame" in the near future.

—Ernest Beauvais has returned to Michigan from the West, and is now at Muskegon, where his wife recently joined him.

—The "Delsarte Attitudes" at the school exhibition to-night, at Lewis Grand Opera House, are well worth going to see.

—The Pine Lake Iron Co. advertise for fifty wood-choppers in this issue. That don't look like shutting down the furnace.

—Jos Goss and wife, of Milwaukee, are here, the guests of Mr. Goss' sister, Mrs. Wm. Stevens. They will remain several weeks.

—Miss Grace Merritt, of the Charlevoix schools leaves Friday for Cadillac, to spend her holiday vacation with friends at that place.

—W. H. McCartney & Co. have a advertisement in their space on our first page. Holiday goods is the subject upon which they speak.

—The band boys promenade concert and masquerade ball at Lewis Grand Opera House, Christmas eve, promises to be a notable event.

—Anson Brown returned home from Duluth Monday, and will spend the holidays here. He has been cooking in the leading restaurant at Duluth.

—Dr. Crouter and Jos. Beauvais left Monday evening for Grand Rapids and Manistee on business connected with their Manistee harbor contract.

—Cornet solos, piccolo solos, bass tuba solos, tuba solos, and xylophone solos at the Promenade Concert and Masquerade Ball Dec. 24th, at Lewis Grand Opera House.

—The reported death of Clinton Whitmoyer, late of this place, proves to be a mistake. Clint is still teaching young hoosiers 'readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic,' and kicks hard against being reported dead.

—Information comes from Harbor Springs of the probable fatal illness of the father of Chas. S. and Will Hampton. Both gentlemen will have the sincere sympathy of all, should the report prove true.

—The occasion of the installation of the officers of Charlevoix Chapter O. E. S., last Wednesday evening was a most enjoyable one. F. J. Smith, the installing officer, was accompanied over from Petoskey by his wife, Mrs. Judson and Mrs. Rowan. A lunch was served, and the evening spent in a most enjoyable way.

—J. Fox has a force of men getting out cedar on his land near "two mile point," south of here.

—A man named Rider was killed in a strange manner near East Jordan Monday. He was driving a steel wedge into a log, when a splinter from the wedge flew up and cut jugular vein. He was a young man, and his father lived near Decatur, Mich.

—The pedro club was to meet this week at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hampton, but they have been called to Harbor Springs by the illness Mr. Hampton's father, and the SENTINEL is requested by Mr. Hampton to announce a postponment of the session for the present.

—The young friends of Charley Nettleton, which means all the young folks, gathered at the residence of G. W. Miller Saturday evening to convey to their going associate their farewell greetings. The evening was very pleasantly, and many tokens of regard left with the young gentlemen.

—Rev. G. S. Barnes will give his fifth lecture to young men next Sunday evening. Mr. Barnes' lectures, thus far in the series have dealt largely with the tobacco habit, and his expose of the extent and effect of the habit, while it has perhaps been rather bold and startling, is unquestionably true and worthy of consideration. The whiskey habit is not the only bad one.

—One of the things that the "kids" take especial delight in, is hitching their coasting sleds to sleighs as they pass through the streets. A gang of them hitched to the wrong outfit, Saturday. The city sprinkler was taking a load of moisture from Rifenburg's pump to the baptismal font of the Baptist Church, when a lot of the boys ran up behind and hitched their strings to the sprinkling pipe, and mounted their sleds for a ride. The driver had no malice in his heart for the boys, but he could not resist the temptation to pull the string and throw her wide open. The result was a lot of good Baptist boys.

—Advices from Rev. W. E. McLennan, who is pastor of the M. E. Mission Chapel in the City of Mexico, state that he and his little child have had protracted illness from malarial fever. Mr. McLennan has recovered and is at his work, but the child, about a year old was left with partial paralysis, which compelled the mother to return to Illinois with it, where they now are. Mr. McLennan has done and is doing a good work there, and with the spirit of a brave Christian warrior, proposes, for the sake of the Master, to remain at the front. His many Charlevoix friends send him greeting, and assure him of sympathetic interest.

Current Marine Notes.

The steamer Gordon will receive a new and larger boiler in the spring.

The propeller Faxton is still running between Cheboygan and the islands on the north shore, and will continue as long as the ice will permit.

The scow Restless, owned by Alden Chamberlain and Wm. Tooley, of this place, and sailed by the latter, is to be sold by the U. S. Marshal for debt.

Another relic gone. The old steamer Van Raalte, reported ashore near Kenosha last week, is a total wreck. In trying to release her the tugs pulled her stern off, and she was abandoned.

The Friant laid up last week, and the Cummings tied up to the upper river revetment Monday for the winter. The Clara Belle is making trips to Petoskey carrying fish, but will lay up probably the last of this week.

Death of Mrs. Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Mrs. Dr. G. W. Crouter (nee Mary A. Auld) died at her home in this village Friday noon, of consumption agravated by the effects of an attack of la grippe.

Mrs. Crouter was born in Hamilton, Ont., August 1st, 1866. Hamilton was her home until her marriage to Dr. Crouter, which occurred there on March 12th, 1889. She accompanied her husband at once to an elegant home already prepared for her reception—a home containing every comfort and convenience, and one where only health was needed to render her life one of happiness and contentment.

It soon became evident that the fateful grasp of consumption had fastened upon her, and last fall Dr. Crouter took her to Florida, where she spent the winter. On her return it soon became evident that she was doomed, and everything possible was done to render her comfortable. She died peacefully, in full possession of the Christian's faith and the Christian's consolation.

Mrs. Crouter was an orphan, and of her own blood leaves only one brother, John A. Auld, of this place. He, with the bereaved husband, have the sympathy of the entire community.

The funeral was held from the residence Sunday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Hood conducting the services. The attendance was large and the occasion one of unusual solemnity.

Late Events.

Hampton is in the soup. Not C. S., of Petoskey, but the Senator from South Carolina. The farmers' alliances have elected their man to the Senate.

The dispatches from the Indian country are more untrustworthy than a Democratic organ's opinion of the tariff. One day the hostiles are surrounded; next they have on their war paint and are scalping each other. There is only one thing of which we can positively assure our readers: The Ottawas and Chippewas of the Township of Hayes are not yet "dancing," with the exception of a few bucks now and then on Saturday afternoons.

The "Irish stew" is still boiling. Parnell is still making a hard fight. But the odds are against him, and he must go down.

Gov.-elect Winans is very sick, and the opinion is expressed that he will never be inaugurated. The people of Michigan, irrespective of party, hope for his recovery.

Trouble for the D. C. & E. R. R. Company.

The history of the D. C. & E. R. R. corporation is well understood by the readers of the SENTINEL. Suit was instituted in U. S. Court last spring by Thos. Rock, contractor, against the company, for work done in grading on their line. On Friday the court rendered a judgment against the corporation, in favor of Rock for $21,000.

Now the question arises whether the franchise of the company is worth the judgment, or whether the stockholders are not responsible for the debt. There is unusual activity among the D. C. & E. officers, but no information can be gained as to what if anything, is being done to save the franchises or protect the stockholders

Sitting Bull Killed.

A report has been received at Gen. Miles' headquarters to the effect that Sitting Bull, the famous Sioux chief, has been killed. It is stated that the Indian police started out to arrest him, and meeting him three miles from camp tried to effect a capture. A fight ensued, in which Sitting Bull was killed. The report has been confirmed by later information, and there is no doubt that the famous Indian has gone to the happy hunting grounds. Seven of the Indian police and two of Sitting Bull's followers were killed in the fight.

Mrs. Capt. John Beattie Dead.

Capt. John. Beattie writes from New Orleans that his wife died on the 25th of last August.

Capt. Beattie expects to be here in May, and talks seriously of making Charlevoix his future home. He has several friends in Scotland whom he is trying to locate in this vicinity.

leges. He said that many rumors had been circulated, growing out of the publication in certain papers before that meeting, intimating that corrupt methods and improper means had been used in the Sexsmith election in Georgia
These slurs and insinuations he denounced as infamously false, and he demanded a full and searching investigation of the whole matter by a committee about which there would be no suspicion

Hs. I. W. McCune and col. L. L. Polk, whose names had also been brought into matter, joined in the demand, the former asking that the charge that the National Economist and other official organs were run by Wall street money be included in the investigation.
The demand was complied with, the committee consisting of one from each State, selected by the delegate from his State. It will take up any charges mare against any officers or members of the organization
The balance of the morning session was taken up by routine business and the introduction of resolutions, which were referred to proper committees.
Among those introduced was one denouncing the railroads of Florida for raising the freight rates on oranges, a constitutional amendment in accordance with President Polk's suggestions for the establishment of a legislative council, and one against the Sunday law of the Dominion of Canada.
At the afternoon session Delegate W.
S. McNeal, editor of Mississippi, offered a resolution, which was adopted, condemning the election bill. The preamble recites that the bill involves a radical revolution in the election machinery of the Union, both State and national, and its passage would be a blow at the autonomy of the States and cherished liberties of the citizens; that in the late war which they have declared against continuing the rights of the farmers of the North, East, South, and West were the citadels around which the hottest battles were being fought; and in the end that victory may crown their arduous and fraternal and noble union, therefore, protest against the passage of the bill, and earnestly petition the Senators to employ all fair and legal means to defeat the measure, which can result in nothing but evil to our common and beloved country.
Mr McAllister took the floor in support of the resolutions, and at the end of a strong speech moved their adoption. As soon as down there was a stillness and hush in the convention which foreboded a storm, and everybody expected it to blow from the Western or Northwestern delegations. But no storm came. After a few moments of suse-pense Delegate Bonding of Pennsylvania stepped and said that he regretted the introduction of the resolutions as untimely; that there was largely prevalent at the North a feeling that the Farmers' Alliance was a Southern organization, its members being saturated with Southern sentiments and that the passage of these resolutions would strengthen that opinion and check the growth of the Alliance in the Northwest. East and West spoke was very temperate and conciliatory, and a ripple of applause greeted the close of his speech Delegate Broadbeath, of the Kansas State Alliance, moved the adoption of the resolutions without reference to any committee and without debate, which was lost
A delegate from Illinois expressed practically the same sentiments as Mr Bonding of Pennsylvania. He feared that the adoption of the resolutions at this time would confirm the charge sometimes heard that the Farmers' Alliance is a partisan body. The Alliance, he said, is fast getting a grip in the West and in localities where Republican sentiment is strong. This action of the national body would tend to throw it into political disrepute and stop its expansion in the States of the West and Northwest
President Hall, of the Missouri State Alliance, moved that the resolutions be tabled; but after a short interval, in which there were several short but impassioned speeches in favor of their passage, he moved to table his original motion, which was carried
The question then recurred on Mr
McAllister's motion to adopt the resolutions, and when the motion was finally put it was carried unanimously amid the wildest enthusiasm.

the Knights of Labor, will speak. Addresses will also be made by Rev. Tre-of Labor; Ralph Beaumont, Chairman of the Congressional Legislative Com-

Lecturer of the Missouri Knights of Labor. Among the fraternal delelocal associations are A. R. Gallagher, of the Workingmen's Reform League of New York City; William A. McCarthy, Chairman of the American Workingmen's League, and also of the New York Free Coinage League. Upon the arrival of Mr. Powderly, which is now announced for Friday afternoon, some matters affecting future political action and consolidation are expected to come under discussion.

While the white alliance was in ses-business transacted was reading of the tendent H. M. Humphrey, who is really the executive head of the organization.

There are about fifty delegates present, and they appear to be intelligent men

Mr. Humphrey's address is a signifi-

FARMERS ADOPT RESOLUTIONS OPPOSING THE MEASURE.

Also Want a Law Which Will Prohibit the Operation of Lotteries in Any State—Proceedings of the National Alliance Convention in Session at Ocala Fla.

[Ocala (Fla.) dispatch.]

The Farmers' Alliance sat down on the fence till today. There was no suggestion in regard to the matter, for the resolutions in regard to the measure were introduced by the Mississippi delegation, seconded by that from Minnesota, discussed by men from nearly all the States North and South, and was finally adopted without a dissenting vote. A delegate from Pennsylvania and one from Illinois thought the resolution was a little premature at this time, but otherwise there was no opposition.
A resolution was also adopted, with little or no difference of opinion, denouncing the Louisiana Lottery and praying for the submission of a constitutional amendment which will make impossible in any of the States this and similar institutions.
Immediately after the reading of the minutes of the morning session this morning Col. L. F. Livingstone, President of the Georgia State Alliance, took the floor on a question of personal privilege. He said that many rumors had

CLUB HOUSE FOR WOMEN

ENTERPRISE OF WIVES AND MOTHERS OF DECATUR.

When Husbands, Fathers and Sons to Bow Down to the Club the Female Element of the Family May Console Itself by Being Flattered.

[Decatur (Ill.) dispatch.]

Three hundred people, members of the representative families of Decatur, with a number of invited guests, from a distance, were present last night at the formal house-warming of the Woman's Club-house. The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Anna H. Millikin, the first President, who extended the cordial greeting of the club to the admiring company. Mrs. James W. Haywarth gave an interesting history of the lot on which the club-house stands. For years the lot was the site of Decatur's first factory, and subsequently the old frame structure was used as a school-house. Musical selections during the evening were rendered by Miss Lizzie Hooper, Miss Jessie Stone, Mrs. G. Harwood, George Trieet, H. L. Bunn, Ralph Templeton, William Page and Leo Heilbron. The reception was a'r o'clock, and did not close until after 11 o'clock.

Few woman societies can boast club-houses. They are almost unknown, in fact, this side of the Atlantic. The club-house of Decatur's Woman's Club of Decatur is distinctly emblematic of the organization which owns and occupies it.

The club-house is naturally intended to administer to those functions of the society which may be termed social. It has its parlors and rooms, the enterprise and adornment of which have not for the society been an enviable reputation more than local in the field of systematic and successful philanthropy and benevolence

The Woman's Club of Decatur had its origin in the Sunnis Society, which was merged in the present organization in 1887. Among the practical results of these three years' work in this city may be mentioned the formation of the Industrial and Charitable Union, the organization of the Woman's Exchange, the reorganization of the working of the Relief Society, the encouraging of the Industrial Home for Independent Girls and the existence of other auxiliary societies in the field of organized charity

The present officers of the society are:

President—Mrs. M. T. Bandall.

Vice President—Mrs. G. H. Bacon

Secretary—Miss Annie Brooks.

Treasurer—Mrs. J. H. Brooks.

Among the honorary members of the club are Mrs Mary A. Livermore of Melrose, Mass., and Miss Kate Field of Washington D. C.

The social work of the club individed into four sections or classes—one for the study of current topics, one for the Shakespeare course and history, one for the study of Shakespeare, and one for the home and philanthropic work. The Shakespeare and poser girls comes under the last named department

The club building is situated on the north side of Central Park, in the heart of the city, and is known as the Woman's Club-house. It is not really the property of the Woman's Club, but has been built and furnished by a stock company of Decatur women, eighty-three in number, all members of the Woman's Club. The officers of the Woman's Club House stock company are:

President—Mrs. Anna H. Millikin.

Vice President—Miss Laura Wilcof.

Treasurer—Mrs. M. T. Bandall.

Directors—The officers and Mrs. Vall, Mrs Ira S. Blackey, Mrs. J. W. Haworth, Mrs. Dr. A. J. Stewart, Mrs. H. G. Pratchet.

The building is a four-story pressed brick and designed by a Chicago architect. The total cost of the structure is $14,000, including the outlay for furniture.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

The last session of the Fifty-first Congress began on the 1st inst. At noon when Vice President Morton's gavel fell he transed on the Senate. Chaplain Butler's prayer was a trifle longer than usual, but it made up in fervor what it lacked in brevity. After prayer the only business in order was the swearing in of new Senators the credentials of Stockbridge Carey and Warren of Wyoming were presented, and they took the oath. Senator Carey's bald head was known to every one in the senate. If Senator Warren it was remarked had to be added another to the long list of youngest-looking Senators who ever graced. The customary resolution that the draw lots to determine their length of service came from Senator Hoar, who is chairman of the committee on rules. Secretary Anson McCook brought out the queer-looking box with its handle like a coffin, popped from which the slips were to be taken, and in less than a minute after the adoption of the resolution it was known that Senator Warren's term will expire March 4, 1893, while Senator Carey will serve six years. Members of the House of Representatives were no lottery in reason why they should not be seated so that in the crowd of people on the floor before 11 o'clock not a dozen were unseated. Not a few came with big caprunning in and out bearing flowers to touches and in the shape of ribbons, baskets gotten up by skilled hands, and skilful floral pieces devoted by enthusiasts friends. The Democrats were specially favored with memento, though the desks of their members in Congress were also tastefully decorated. Some 200 members were present when the chaplain invoked the blessing, and although the tedious roll-call enough more came in to swell the number to 227. The galleries were jammed, except those reserved for the Predent's family and the diplomats where a few persons, hardly looking were seated.
The speaker had much difficulty in moderating the noisy applause, but he succeeded after the clerk had read the responses to the roll-call.

Yesterday adoption of the rules devised by the calendar in the Senate on the 23d. Mr Hoar moved to proceed to the consideration of the House bill to amend and supplement the election laws of the United States and to provide for the more efficient enforcement of such laws." Mr. Gorman demanded the yeas and nays on that motion. The yeas and nays were taken and the vote is 47 yeas, 34 nays, 6 absent, 1 pair, 41 votes. So the election bill was taken up, and the reading was dispensed with and twenty clerks up to 2 o'clock, when under the rules of the Senate, the unfinished business from the last session came up, being the House bill providing for the adjustment and payment of claims against the chains arising under the eight-hour law.
Mr. Hoar moved to proceed with the consideration of the House bill, and Mr.
Gorman rose to argue against that motion.
A motion to proceed to the consideration of the election bill was continued. In the House Mr. Harter of Ohio presented the resolutions of officers of Philadelphia to repeal an amendment to the McKinley bill allowing a rebate on wrapper tobacco, making labacco and snuff deferred. In the morning Mr. Simonds reported from the Comon Patents, called up for consideration the copyright bill. Mr Parsons (Ala.) asked the consideration of the House bill to close decided yeas, 142; nays, 74—to consider the bill. Yesterday was spent in debate.

In the Senate, Mr. Hawley, from the Committee on Military Affairs, on the 30 reported and asked to have put upon its calendar a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms and ammunition to the States of North and South Dakota. Mr Manderson moved to amend by including the State of Nebraska, and referred to the threatened uprising of the Sioux Indians on their reservation. Senator
Mr. Vorhees said that if the Indians were one to issue a hundred thousand rations of food to the starving Indians it would be more on friend with Christian civilization. Mr. Sims, he said, had stated in public interviews that the Indians were driven to revolt by starvation, and it was in his judgment a crime on the part of the Government to amend Sioux by and do nothing except furnish arms to the whites. In the House the copyright bill was passed, the vote being 130 to 35—a majority for the bill. The affirmative vote was given by 105 Republicans and 24 Democrats and the negative by 34 Democrats and 2 Republicans. The passage of the copyright came from the Eastern and Middle States, while the bulk of the opposition was from the West and South. The vote is substantially the same as that which passed the Senate in the Fifty-first session and failed to be acted upon in the House.

Well, be it so, for once indeed, to see as I am seen,
To launch and rest, to frown or sigh, and Sighs, the I mean.
The perfect disguise Some much, my tresses turning gray,
The crowing years have registered just three score years to-day Faithful always even near ages my hated eyes
To trace the lines where dimples shone in happy days gone by
I may not sigh for cheek of rose, for still my face is fair,
And time has rift my teeth of pearl and cherries a ruby pair
The silent thief has left me, too, a thankful heart and pay
For worldly blessing, as I go down life's dusty way.

I sometimes think my weight goes on, and yet I am contented,
And quite ignoring the anti-fat some genius sir which I am taking,
Nor envy in my inmost soul the skeleton or that
That Worth, the butterfly resurrect with costing puff and pad
It does not trouble me to know I grow old, though little children
Are very fond of grandmama, and cling about my knee.
Just as I used to cling to one some fifty years ago
The sweetest face I ever saw, framed in a cap of snow.

It seems indeed, but yesterday she called
And whispered, "Blessings on you, Trot," which my sight and died
"You look needs as I," she said; "your hair like mine a while.
Now, kiss me, dear, once more again, and then we'll say good-night.
A last good-night, and I shall hear her gentle voice no more,
Still called from earth with all its care to see the other of shore.

"Poor Arthur," she muttered. "What demon luck is this? After my not going to the funeral of my sister and then, by my absence, showing that I had not overlooked her plebeian marriage, to think that these people have forwarded such a letter as this to me is absurd! I am not care if it was written by her before her death. They might have known
I did not wish it. Take charge of her child's shame, forsooth! The girl be hanged. She may go to the alms house for all me! I will not have a thing to do with it.

"Suppose my brother-in-law did die, and his wife also, and suppose the girl is left alone, that is no sign that I should be tormented with her presence and guardianship. No! I will never notice the stuff written there by weak or dead."

So saying, Sir Reginald turned to his library, tossed the offensive letter into a drawer of his bookcase, locked it, and then sat down at his desk, tore up, lighted the bits of taboret, and watched the flames rising under the eight-hour law.

CHAPTER VI.

SIR REGINALD GLENDUNNING.

Sir Reginald Glendunning was out of humor one sunny morning in May.

The daily mail had been handed him, as usual, just as he had commenced his breakfast, and one letter that he had then received had disconposed and made him surly and cross, which a fearful oath made evident to all.

"Jimmy, you young rascal, don't stand gazing there, but attend to your duties. Lady Constance, just stop gazing in that exponential way at me, and eat your breakfast! I know what I am saying, though your looks seem to think I'm."

"This was by no means an unusual mood for her husband to be in, and Lady Constance Glendunning, whenever she saw the peculiar expression float over his face that it now wore (for it was an ugly look that for years she had been accustomed to mark), knew by experience that it was best to make no remark, but quietly leave him to himself by vacating the room as quickly as possible.

"Oh, Constance, Constance!"

Starting from this dreary sleep, she tossed restlessly until morning, and then, after tossing about that the imbecile made upon her mind had not in the least vanished.

Upon being so roughly addressed at the breakfast hour she had with difficulty restrained her tears, and when once more alone, in the retirement of her own apartment, she sank upon her knees, and weeping bitterly, moaned:

"Oh, Arthur, why was I so unfaithful to thy precious memory? Why did I forget, even so soon, my own, my own? Wretched, guilty woman that I have been, to send for a little, and inheritance so unfeeling and heartless a man as I, alas! have done! Oh, God! forgive this, my sin, and grant me peace with thyself after my death! Oh, Arthur, Arthur!

Long and bitterly she thus wrestled with her own heart, never stirring from her lowly posture, until she was suddenly aroused by a horrified scream from lips she knew to be Bella's, while a strange call in tones of anguish for "Aunt Constance" caused her to rise and open the door, where she, too, was startled to see the whole household assembled in the hall, with, from the first knowledge of some awful calamity fell upon her heart.

To Escape from Tornadoes.

When trying to escape from a tornado never go in the northeast, east, or southeast. Never take refuge in a forest or a grove of trees, or near any object that may be crushed by falling. Protection must be accomplished by organized capital, the safety of one being assured by the legitimate and successful co-operation of many.

The writer strongly advocated this method of protection during his tornado investigations in the West in 1879, and now one million dollars' worth of property is thus insured every year.—Forum.

"It's a Shop, Sir!"

I had an experience all my own in Lock & Co.'s hat store, in St. James in Palestine, where they display the ancient helmets and caps in his window, which is kept scrupulously dusty. Noling this I said, "This must be a very old hat store, indeed?"

"Store?" said the man. "It's no store at all; it's a shop, sir. I call a store a place for the sale of a miscellaneous assortment of things, sir. You ought to be more careful in your use of terms."

If that was rudeness—and I do not know how great he considered his provocation—it was the only rudeness I experienced from any shopkeeper. But I learned from that incident not to say anything in a hat store. The door I had swelled my index expurgatorius to the extent that I seldom used the following words: Guess, yes, sir, glass (for tumbler), railroad, horseracing, fix, store, or pad of paper.

"Block of paper," they said, when I at last got them to understand that I wanted a block of paper, and I am a pure Americanismus, and are to be used or not as you want to attract curious attention or to avoid it. But the most difficult thing for me to Americanize in England was to avoid saying "sir" to a stranger who addressed them or to an old gentleman. "Yes, sir," and "No, sir," over there are the verbal insignia of a servant.—Julian Ralph, in Harper's Weekly.

Were Not Full.

A negro woman borrowed a dozen eggs from a neighbor, and instead of returning a dozen, brought back only eleven.

"How's dis?" the lender asked.

"How's what, lady?"

"Why you borrit a dozen aigs from me, but dar ain't but eleben yere. How does you 'count for dat?"

"I 'counts for it might easy. Dem aigs I got from you wa'n't right full."

"Wa'n't right full! What you means by dat?"

"I means dat da wa'n't full—dat de hens what laid 'em wa'n't right honest. Deze aigs dat I have fetched you is full up ter de brim; an' yo' know 'spect me ter fetch you er dozen full aigs fer er dozen. I wa'n't cheated too much like a 'underclound to be rejoiced into receiving her here."

"Yes, that is true, so we need not be anxious," was the girl's reply, as she hastened from the library.

Need we stop to say, after relating such a scene, to describe the wholly heartless characters of these relations of Lady Constance Glendunning?

Indulged from infancy by their own parents as much as by the Lady Constance, whose whole affections had centered upon them, in consequence of the cold manner of her moody, passionate husband toward herself, it is not to be wondered at that they developed with their selfish and unamiable dispositions under her foolishly fond sway, until at last they demanded as a right the indulgence of every whim, or caprice, even at the expense of honor or the welfare of those around them.

As for Lady Constance, her naturally amiable disposition had grown hardened. Life with her violent-tempered husband had proved anything but pleasant, and she finally saw his sujer features of character being imitated by these children under her charge, she became wordfully indifferent and cold to such a degree that her nearest relatives could scarcely recognize in the proud Lady Constance Glendunning the once light-hearted and gay young cousin, whom society was so much sought in former years by the three brothers before their father's death, when life had been so different for each.

Ah! little had these brothers dreamed in those gay, glad, youthful days, of the hard and cruel future that lay before two, at least, of their number!

The morning Lady Constance felt unusually dispirited.

Her apathetic heart had been moved the night before by a singularly vivid dream, in which she had met once more her mother forgotten early lover, and the face of Sir Arthur had appeared in that mingled heaven with all her relatives of life, while she seemed to hear him wail in despair:

"Oh, Constance, Constance!"

Starting from this dreary sleep, she tossed restlessly until morning, and then, after tossing about that the imbecile made upon her mind had not in the least vanished.

Upon being so roughly addressed at the breakfast hour she had with difficulty restrained her tears, and when once more alone, in the retirement of her own apartment, she sank upon her knees, and weeping bitterly, moaned:

Remarks Under Consideration in the Senate and House.

The election bill was taken up in the Senate on the 4th and Mr. Pugh spoke in opposition to it. He said the country could not fail to understand the true character and nature of the proposed legislation. It was never intended to be just legislation in Republican minds. It was a measure which there could not be a Democrat in the United States who would not be ashamed to be found in. It was a measure which was formed in Congress that would not be endured by any intelligent Republican. He endeavored to show that the operation of the bill was a transparent and unblushing attempt to carry out partisan purposes thus the capture of Democratic districts, by the House, and the perpetuation of party domination in Congress. Mr. Hoar said the Democratic majority in the House had undertaken to repeal the election laws of the country and he presumed if a vote could be passed, the action of the Senate of Congress would be entered into consideration of the whole question. He said the bill contemplated the protection of the rights of the people of the United States, and he was astonished that any Senator would be disinclined among the Democratic side. Provisions for the protection of the Republican voters provided for in any single bill to the exclusion of the other, he said, it was enforced that the most loose lawless and disorderly elements of the country would be encouraged to carry the election by force and violence. He said that the Republicans

Some of those Democratic campaign liars talked about "hard times," "high prices" and "panic" are now bearing fruit. Capital is shy and takes alarm at the first sign of danger. It doesn't pay to start a panic even for campaign purposes.

The rejoicings in Great Britain over Democratic success are tempered by the knowledge that the lower house of Congress is powerless to injure the cause of protection so long as the Republicans have the senate. England will not have fully captured this country unless she gets the senate as well as the house; and even in that event, a Democratic president would be necessary before the British conquest would be complete.

Prof. Angell, of Michigan University, furnishes the following as a fair test of the purity of water for drinking: "Dissolve about half a teaspoonful of the purest white sugar in a pint bottle completely full of the water to be tested, and tightly corked; expose it to daylight, and a temperature up to 70 degrees Fahrenheit. After a day or two examine, holding the bottle against something black, for whitish floating specks which will betray the presence of organic matter in considerable proportion." To which we add, let the reader be sure that the sugar is pure, and that the bottle is absolutely clean."

Those who are crying for free coinage of silver should be sure they know what they want. Is it the free coinage of silver—the acceptance and coinage of that metal at the mint in its actual dollars, in one thing, and the purchase of unlimited quantities of bullion without exchange and the issue of paper certificates therefor in another thing. One is coinage and the other is inflation. If every man's silver is to be taken and he is to be allowed a legal tender dollar for every 50 cents' worth of it, by all means let it be coined. Then the government also gets the benefit of the metal being put into circulating shape. The government can pay it out to its creditors as well as individuals. But for the government to pay a dollar for every 70 cents' worth of silver is a form of "always taking out of the meal tub and never putting in," which will sooner or later result in a famine. Give the country good money and plenty of it, but no inflation.

To carry out properly the great exposition of 1893 requires many millions of money. In 1889 and the early part of 1890 the citizens of Chicago subscribed $4,000,000 toward the World's Fair fund. That sum is now needed to proceed with the undertaking, but only $1,000,000 has been paid in, and $2,000,000 more must be raised before the city can avail itself of the $5,000,000 of bonds which the last legislature of Illinois authorized Chicago to issue for this purpose. The great question in Chicago now is, when will the $2,000,000 be put up? It looks like a very difficult operation. As the recent money stringency and the knocking in speculative values have materially reduced the ability of the subscribers to pay, Chicago will have to scrape and strain during the next year to pay over what she promised Congress before the sale affair is over. this grand show will cost Chicago $15,000,000 or $16,000,000, and some of its best citizens begin to think that the people have no hand an elephant of gigantic proportions.

Grievances of the Indians.

The Sioux Indians not only complain that they have been put on short rations by the government, and to have suffered more or less for the past two years, but they also complain that the census enumerators are doing them great injustice. They insist that the lodges have not been fully enumerated in 1890, and as the government issues its rations on that basis, if the number be incorrectly stated the suffering must continue for the next ten years, for if there be really 10 Indians where the enumerators report only ninety the provisions distributed for ninety will have to suffice for 100 persons. This will be severe upon the Sioux. It would be much better for the secretary of the interior to order a new census of the Sioux, because as long as the Indians believe they have not been fairly enumerated that will breed a feeling of sullen and revengeful hostility toward the whites. It would be better as a policy and cheaper in a momentary point of view to have another census taken, which would satisfy them that the government intends to be fair and just in all its dealings with them.

The number of hostile Sioux is undeniable, but be it 1,200 lodges, averaging 2,000 warriors. These Indians have virtually refused to return to their agencies, and are encamping in the recesses of the Bad lands of Dakota. This does not look satisfactory, but perhaps the very cold weather and the scarcity of provisions will bring them to a more peaceful frame of mind. In reference to the dissatisfaction of all the Indians, Gen. Schofield has remarked that they are to be discovered they will have to be made prisoners of war. Therefore he doubts the policy of attempting to disarm all the Sioux warriors, who cannot number less than 6,000 effective men. Those who show hostility by their acts must of course be disarmed, and they will be held as prisoners of war until they show signs of a better life.

When Indians are established on the agencies they are presumed to be friendly, and therefore should have the enjoyment of those rights and privileges which are accorded to a civilized people. The government has collected from 5,000 to 6,000 troops in and around the Sioux country, who there is force enough at the Pine Ridge and Rosebud agencies to defeat all hostiles if they can be reached. But in the depths of winter it will be difficult for the troops to root out and conquer the Indians who have taken refuge in the fastnesses of the Bad lands.

Northern Michigan News.

Hillsdale's new $[illegible] school house will soon be finished.

Reed City claims to have the finest opera house in Northern Michigan.

The lumber cut for the last season, as reported from Muskegon, amounts to 120,000,000 feet.

Cheboygan is to have a mammoth tannery which will give employment to 300 men all the year round.

W. H. Anderson, vice A. Anderson resigned, has been appointed postmaster of Kewadin, Antrim county.

Sherman has subscribed $1,[illegible] toward a $5,000 bonus necessary to secure a big basket factory to make Indian relics for the Petoskey resorters next summer.

Stuart McKibben late superintendent of the Petoskey schools was lodging a similar position in Marshall has just been elected worshipful master of the masonic lodge there.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Monty, of Boyne Falls, was celebrated at their residence on the 3d. The gifts were numerous and elegant and the attendance large.

Almost every Northern Michigan paper you pick up contains the announcement of one or more parties who have been trying their luck in some other section, only invariably to say this section is best for the laboring man.

George Doane and Daniel Edwards went to Charlevoix county on Monday afternoon, and will be absent about two weeks exploring the wilderness of that region, in the interest of land owners and timber buyers.—Cadillac News.

It is said that the school house in Boyne City is in an unsafe condition. The walls are cracking badly and so much apprehension is felt that a committee was appointed to examine it, but just what they will report cannot be learned.

East Jordan seems to be the asylum for all the religious cranks in northern Michigan. A Mormon has held forth there for some time, and now a "friend of the Millennium," appears on the scene, and says it is ungodly to wear "solid shirts" or jewelry. If he will only convert Dixon, of the Enterprise, he will be doing a good work.

Petoskey Record: A certain young gentleman who has moved his bachelor quarters southward, writes home that on the whole the girls here are prettier than in Petoskey." Out on him! There isn't a village the size of Petoskey in the United States where there are so many nice, pretty and lovable girls as we have right here; and the average size of shoes sold is only No. 3. We have half a dozen boys to give his name so that the Petoskey girls can prepare a reception for him when he comes home on a visit. A bath in a tub of water, softened and supplemented by "perfine" would be about the thing. If the girls will prepare the tub, we'll furnish the name.

There is a lively postoffice fight on at Petoskey, and dollars and not principle is the cause of it. Postmaster James Buckley thinks he has the right to hang out his official shingle where he pleases within the corporate limits of his town, and he proposes to move the office into David & Lachman's brand new brick block on Mitchell street, where there is more room and more style for about the same money. For eight long years the office has been located at the corner of Lake and Howard streets, and the business men in that vicinity think this place is good enough for eight years more. A town of Petoskey's dimension, near a good harbor means business, and business means dollars, and hence the fight.

Dog Saved the Child.

Joseph Melnarg, of Pebble Cottage, Beachwood, has a big Newfoundland dog that would have been the joy of the late Charles Darwin.

One day this week little Harry Gordon, the son of Robert Gordon, of the Pebble, took a few pennies from his mother and started off to "buy candy," as he told her. As Harry is but 3 1/2 years of age, his long absence worried his mother who went out to search for her son. For some time the hunt was without success.

At last she was told that a child had been seen going up the track, accompanied by Wallace Mr. Melnarg's big dog.

After passing Beachwood in the mother looked ahead and saw far up the railroad the boy and dog together.

As trains on the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn Road pass that way every few minutes the mother made all possible haste to get at her child.

As she neared the spot, a train came thundering down from Boston right toward the boy.

Mrs. Gordon saw the danger and cried for help, but though many persons were in sight of the child none were near enough to render aid.

In a few seconds more the train would be upon the boy, but at that moment "Wallace" seized the child by his dress and by force pulled it from the track.

The thankful mother took her little Harry home safe and sound.

"Robert" Gordon and his wife naturally think "Wallace" the most intelligent dog living.—Boston Globe.

Mrs. Custer and Clara Morris.

Mrs. General Custer, whose book, "Following the Guidon," is attracting favorable criticism, is recognized as one of the talented women of the profession. Perhaps the choice of all Mrs. Custer's friends is Clara Morris. Between whom and the widow of the brave and handsome cavalry officer a warm attachment has existed for many years. The meeting between these two notable women was a peculiar one, and illustrates how warm friendships are formed by impulse.

Miss Morris was then a struggling actress, having just made her first hit with the old Daly company at the Fifth Avenue Theater. She was filling a short engagement in New Orleans and was making her home at the St. Charles Hotel. General Custer was stationed at New Orleans, and he and Mrs. Custer were also residing at the St. Charles. The French market in New Orleans is one of the sights of the city, and no visitor does New Orleans justice unless he pays it a visit. The best time to observe all the peculiarities and customs of the market people is before daybreak, when the marketmen are arriving with their provisions. Miss Morris and General and Mrs. Custer imposed to select the morning for their visit. The ladies of the hotel had risen in a glorious way, but the old man had things.

"See, Mary, what's the matter with you, girl," he said. "Don't you recognize the famous man you people are lionizing?"

Mrs. Custer walked over to her and took her hand, and we sat down side by side and talked over old times. The Custers were on the plains when the sad news of the massacre of Custer and his soldiers was flashed over the wires. Mrs. Custer has written several books on life on the Western plains, but has never yet written of her fearless husband's last fight, and, unless she changes her plans materially, she never will.

The Cave-Dwellers.

At a New York residence may be seen a curiosity the like of which has never probably been heard of before. It is a troglodyte, a perfect specimen, found in the "Bad Lands" of South Dakota by two cowboys who took refuge in a cave when on one occasion their cattle, which had been stampeded. The two cowboys were employed by Frank Gaffney, a rancher near Rapid City, South Dakota. They had gathered their stampeded cattle in a gulch on the Sioux Reservation, and, night coming on, they sought the best shelter they could find. In crawling into a natural cave one of them found the remains of a petrified body. Calling his partner to his assistance, they unearthed and brought it to the light. The petrification was clearly that of a human being, about three feet in length, of a reddish-brown color, and one of its chief characteristics being the great length of the arms, which reached below the knee. Placing it in front of one of them on his pony, they carried it to Rapid City, where J. M. Duvell of Minneiali, saw it and, realizing its value as a natural curiosity, at once closed a bargain for it, giving in exchange a quarter section of land.

Naturalists have been consulted the petrifaction say that it is probably the remains of one of the "cave-dwellers," a prehistoric race of men which peopled America ages ago. It certainly answers to the description of a troglodyte. The teeth are the same in number as those of man, the fingers and toes long and deeply separated, the thumb opposite the other four, arms very long, legs short and not in the same line with the thighs, with the knees turned outward. It was found in a perfect state of preservation, except the top of the left shoulder, where the bone is exposed.

Some who have examined the petrifaction think that it may be the remains of a deformed Sioux Indian, but those who know the habits of the Sioux say a deformed Indian child is never to be found among them, they following the Spartan custom of killing all deformed infants, besides which the petrifaction is evidently that of an adult.

Mr. Duvell has recently been offered $1,000 for the specimen, but declined the offer, and will exhibit it as a great natural curiosity.

At the End.

She was a bright girl, and they were at the season's last game of base ball. She had won his enthusiastic cheers by understanding the game right off, and he loved her even more than if she had been a dy his sister.

"It reminds me of the honeymoon," he said. "The plane, the batter, the fowls and the floor etc."

"And it reminds me of marriage," she added. "First the diamond, where they are engaged; then the struggles and the hits; then the men going out, and, finally, the difficulty they have in getting home!"

And he sat and thought and thought.—Philadelphia Times.

A HAIRSBREADTH ESCAPE.

How a Drummer Came Very Near Getting Nailed in Another Man's Grip.

"Talking about funny and odd adventures, why, I have had enough while on the road to fill a big volume. Some half a dozen drummers were seated in the corridor of a hotel, when some one suggested a story.

They had arrived in town in the afternoon and were talking over their prospects of getting to work the next day. In the party were a representative of a Western wooden goods house, a publishing house, a big hardware and a hardware firm. Several other drummers who were in town soon joined the party.

"Let's tell some of his yarns," suggested the wooden-goods man.

Loy had entered the opening sentence and he was known to be fertile of anecdotes. All hands insisted on his breaking the ice and the party adjourned to the reading-room, where he began his story.

"Boys, I have been on the road a good many years. I have tramped from one end of this country to the other, been to Europe and Canada, but the funniest experience I ever had was up in well—well, never mind, I won't mention the place, for it was in Connecticut."

He complied, he explained, consisted of a line of hardware goods and he had made a special visit to a town, so when Sunday came he determined to take a ride in the suburbs.

"All went on well," he continued, "until I was almost ten miles out, and then a thunderstorm came on.

"I had no umbrella," he explained, "and I was almost wet through, but didn't want to get wet. I looked about for a place of shelter, when fortunate, I got by a barn when meeting it I discovered a good crowd behind the door.

"I have got lots of guts, and so have I got a good share of curiosity, so I pushed through the crowd. Some one hailing in the farmhouse was open, and so I walked. An old typical Yankee woman was peeling onions and remarked, 'How d've do?' I noticed she had an eye that knew me.

"'Come off your things,' he said, 'and come in. Mary's sight crazy at your visit and pretty too, I tell you.'

"I was sort of paralyzed see, but I didn't dare to back out, and so I followed the old man into the parlor.

"A crowd of people were there, and I didn't know a single soul, and I felt as if I was a fool. Every eye was fixed on me, and I bowed and bowed, and his guide slapped him on the back and said to the company:

"'I knowed he'd show up.'

"The thing began to puzzle me," the narrator continued. "The whispering of the company, and the old man's remarks about my not disappointing staggered me. The girl in the corner had stood up in a curious way, but the old man stood things.

"'See, Mary, what's the matter with you, girl,' he said. 'Don't you recognize the famous man you people are lionized.'

"Mary walked over to me and took my hand, and we sat down side by side and talked over old times. FORTY YEARS

Sighed how long must I wait, when, sitting by the door
Over them and beyond them, I saw my ship, the
And I pacing to and fro, with a heart as heavy
As the only living thing

Wait! she, at last, drew near, my ship! O how wild Rang my heart and my voice! Wait, indeed! Wait Wait, forsooth, who knew how! In hand
Ropes I threw, and I drew, and I hauled, and I Drew the ship to the land, and I said, "Ship, I Wait no longer for you!"

Ship! I cried, as I drew, ship! I cried, as I
Hauled and I drew, ship! I cried, as I Drew the ship to the land, "Ship, I Will be true to you, faithful forty years and Forever!"

AN ITALIAN ROMANCE.

BY ETTA ROBINSON.

The sun, setting in the glory of golden amber, flung a blushing tint over the quivering the rippling blue waters of the bay of Naples. Into the water's edge, at a little village, there was a tiny cottage and on his low porch, before his door, sat Giovanni Rossetti, the daughter of Flavio the vine-dresser.

As she turned her wheel she sang in a low voice, thinking to herself: Soft dreaming of the sunset as from the cottage door musing on the figure of her father. He was a very old man, and in his heart he betrayed thoughts of intelligence beyond his humble station. I am so he would greatly rejoice for me to come to his daughter's side his aven flushed his and his face worked convulsively.

"Father! what is it? What has happened?" she cried, in evident alarm.

Tender, gentle the old man's sweet nothing, but told her to her his hand in which rested a small, round object. Into the sunset that with what seemed to be a profile threshingly, unfolding himself a glass encrusted was meaning to Rossetti's mind.

"Look, my child," said the dear old man, "look, my child, and tell me what you see."

The old man seated himself by his daughter's side, and began a long and earnest explanation; and as she listened, the girl's color became lighted up with a severe equal in his own. For then and there, in the humble vineyard cottage, was explained for the first time the generation of that wonderful mechanic needle which has since been the guide of every mariner on the green deep.

"My daughter," said the old man, at length, "I have labored and thought long, and was sincere in your at hand, but my work is not done until some one long and powerful sees and understands its importance."

"Father," exclaimed Rossetti, "in three more weeks will be a new day, and the King and Queen will be in the city. Shall we not go and see the discovery at their feet? I have heard that since delight in honor all who, I believe, are loyal."

Mr. daughter's proposition found favor with Flavio, and the time named always in anticipation the monument based for moving dawned.

"Father," said he, my child," said Flavio, lying his aged hand gently upon his daughter's head, "for we know but that today may be the turning-point in your destiny. Some noble lord may see and love my Rossetta."

The girl grew very pale as she said, "Father, you know that neither lords nor marrying are say more in my thoughts. I refused your consent to Paolo, and those him from my side by your stern decision; and you I shall never see another who will have the power to touch my heart."

"Rossetta," Flavio said, "what I did was for the best. Paolo was but poor, and I knew that in the future Flavio's daughter might be a bride for the richest nobleman. We will not repeat having sacrified your feelings to your ability as a noble child."

Rossetta did not really, for all her father's words, come vividly back the memory of her young lover's passionate pleading vows as he thought fire to leave all and come with him who loved her as well and truly.

Rossetta's instinctive good taste taught her that her simple cotton dress would become her, and attired in a white bordered robe let a scarlet and belted her long black hair she started with her father on the way to the great city, among Flavio's wares. The sun was unfortunate dresses were to be realized, in a sense as a gay, light dancer he was to end his last declining day.

As Rossetta had said, it was the day. Down the street, beneath the morning sunlight, came the Queen in her state coach. Foremost rode King Ferdinand, and by his side, on a gallant steed, perfect, his lovely wife, Queen Joanna. Then followed the nobles, who had been honored by being allowed to form a triumphant escort. Their scarlet Conquerors among the glittering throng was one youth, taller and prettier than the others. As he passed the youth from beneath which a little and his daughter were gazing set upon him, to that, great approach, the eyes of youth rested upon Rossetta. A common flush sprang to his very brow. In another moment he had passed, and Rossetta had not seen him.

It was but in the old man's heart had arrived when the king received the questions of his subjects. In the line awaiting their turn, we Flavio, one trembling hand holding the Rossetta continued its process discovery, and the other resting upon his daughter's shoulder.

Suddenly a page, clad in the royal colors, approached.

"Is your name Flavio?" he said. If so, you and your maiden are to come with me."

Wonderingly, Flavio and Rossetta followed the page.

Poetry's not the heart of the village girl on the hard hot-oil in the presence of royalty; and, with her eyes timidly veiled beneath their dark fringes, she stood while her father, in low but clearly expressed words, laid before his sovereign his invention.

As King Ferdinand listened intently, Queen Joanna rose and beckoned to Rossetta to come forward. Tremblingly she advanced, looking, in her simple robe in that gorgeous assemblage, like a prose white rosebud amid a setting of dazzling tropical orchids.

Queen Joanna patted her agitation, and, gently laying her hand upon her arm, she drew her close to her side and looked penetratingly into her face.

"Tell me, maiden, is this a good taste, she murmured softly to herself.

By this time Flavio had finished his explanation, and, with eyes whose light age and no power to dim, he was expecting his King's commendations and congratulations. It was a proud moment. The success he had dreamed of was his.

Suddenly Queen Joanna's soft voice interrupted her husband's words.

"My liege," she said, "have I your permission to speak at this present and most opportune moment the interest of which I told you some time back?"

Thus, as her husband signified his consent, she turned to Rossetta.

"Sweet one," she said, "I have long known of your fair beauty and great goodness, and had intended one day to have summoned you to our presence; but hearing I your father's discovery, and that he intend to lay it before the King, have waited until now. Some time ago, while passing through the village in which you live, a young and lovely lady lingered in coin as and lost her heart to you. He told me in his passion and brought my help which the I love him as a mother I promised, I have you, in the presence of ourselves and those witnesses, and then one and to be united in holy matrimony to our nephew, the young Lord D'Ashbury."

Rossetta had listened, almost unconscious of what in the above startling words. Now she drew back, and the delicate color exchanged had brought into her cheeks, leaving in low but trembling tones, she replied, "Pardon me, most gracious Queen, but I shall never marry."

As he heard, Flavio started to his side, low in her ear, whispered, "My daughter, did I not promise you that this day would be the turning point in your life? Do not let your pride and foolish clinging to the past. Accept this good fortune which is laid before you."

But the maiden was firm.

"Your Majesty," she said, "I know of no noble lord whom I have ever seen; but there is one, and only one—a humble artist—who has my heart, even though I shall never meet him more. For he left me in anger thinking me false to him, because I obey my father's commands.

"I will be true to my single carving his lovely speech, Queen Joanna turned to a group of courtiers who stood in a distant corner of the audience chamber.

"Come, Lord D'Ashbury, come near," she said.

Suddenly Rossetta felt her hand clasped, and her eyes rested upon a handsome, pleading face she will know.

"Pardon!" she ejaculated.

"Yes, Rossetta, we can forgive me my deception." I wished to win my love for love of manly grace, and I, the Lord D'Ashbury, am that Paolo—the humble artist whom you said away so coldly and cruelly. I was deeply angered at first, but I soon learned that it was only filial obedience which had prompted your action, and then I had no choice save before my sweet—my future wife—to bow to her in the manner I has pleased her to fulfill her promise of sacrifice."

Thus, with the marriage in the full blaze of every glory, of the Lord D'Ashbury and Rossetta, the daughter of Flavio, the discovered of a romance which, wherever the legend Italian Tongue is spoken, has been sung in lullaby and told in prose and verse.

COMMON VERSUS

"Freddie, dear, have you seen my spectacles anywhere?" asks the old lady.

"Your gold-rimmed glasses, grandmamma?"

"Yes."

"Why, no."

"Are you wear on your nose and see through, grandma?"

"Yes, where are they?"

"The glasses that grandpa gave you?"

"Yes."

"A Christmas present?"

"Yes; tell me where they are."

"Are they the glasses that you read the Bible with, grandma?"

"Yes, yes; I'm getting impatient, Freddie. Let them be one."

"Are glasses that you read about Daniel and Paul with, and the three children in the fery furnace?"

"Yes, to the same glasses. Tell me where they are at once, Freddie, and quit asking—idiotic questions."

"And do you want to read with them, grandma?"

"Yes, I want to see."

"Why are you going to sew, grandmamma?"

"I want to hem a few handkerchiefs."

"For me?"

"No, for grandpa. Where are those glasses, you little torment?"

"You can't sew with the glasses, can you, grandma?"

"Why, of course I can. I can't sew without them."

"I thought you sewed with a sewing machine, grandma."

"Oh, you aggravating boy! Look right at me. Now tell me where those glasses are."

"Honest?"

"Have you seen them lately?"

"No."

Santiago is naturally the great educational centre of Chili, writes Theodore Child, in the Harper's. In the Alameda is the university, which counted 1,110 students in 1889, and has already turned out some doctors and lawyers. Here the country needs, whether for professional purposes or for the more sterile and fleeting occupations of politicians, Devotion and Sonnets. Near the Hospital of San Vincent de Paul are statuettes to the cemetery is an Eocenia de Madrid—a remarkable colored stone monument in the always popular Pantheon of the Chilean artist exhibitions. Then we have for high or and secondary education the Instituto Nacional of Santiago, with 1,300 pupils, and twenty-five private lycées with a total of 3,000 pupils. Finally comes the free primary schools throughout the country, numbering more than 1,000, and having a total attendance of 87,000 boys and girls. There are also several schools for preparing teachers.

Prof. Angell, of Michigan University furnishes the following as a fair test of the purity of water for drinking: "Dissolve about half a teaspoonful of the purest white sugar in a pint bottle completely full of the water to be tested, and tightly corked; expose it to daylight, and a temperature up to 70 degrees Fahrenheit. After a day or two examine, holding the bottle against something black, for whitish floating specks, which will betray the presence of organic matter in considerable proportion." To which a local physician add, "Be sure that the sugar is pure, and that the bottle is absolutely clean."

The rejoicings in Great Britain over Democratic success are tempered by the knowledge that the lower house of Congress is powerless to injure the cause of protection so long as the Republicans have the senate. England will not have fully captured this country unless she gets the senate as well as the house; and even in that event, a Democratic president would be necessary before the British conquest would be complete.

A Harbor Springs telegram of the 15th says: The bodies of Joseph Marshall, his son Charles and Herbert Cormier, of this village, were found washed ashore seven miles north of here today. They were returning from a fishing cruise, and the supposition is the boat capsized during the storm yesterday. Marshall leaves a widow and two children. Cormier was the main support of a widowed mother and four children.

Comrade Young who has been hospital steward at Fort Mackinac for the past three years, and for five years at the same post in the 70's, was placed on the retired list (under the new law) last week, and left on Monday for the east. Comrade Young has been on the medical staff of the army since 1861, and served faithfully and well. He proposes to practice medicine, but has not yet decided on location. He was a member of Henry C. Pratt post No 289, of Mackinac island.

Hon. S. S. Walker, president of the Michigan Mortgage Co., Limited, of St. Johns, has a letter in the Grand Traverse Herald, of last week in which he quotes government statistics that show an apparent decrease in the number of cultivated acres in Grand Traverse county. He also states that Grand Traverse is the only one of the thirty Northern Michigan counties in which his company does business that does not show a good increase. Charlevoix is one of these counties.

Manistee Bowlet: That our readers abroad may have something of an idea of what the Manistee iron furnace is doing, we will state that during the past season 8,000 cords of iron ore, 120 carloads of limestone and 3,000 carloads of charcoal have been received at that institution while the daily output of pig iron averages fifteen cars. The monthly pay roll of the company shows that 425 men are given steady employment by it. This figure does not include the wood choppers as they do not work during the hot months of the summer.

Remarkable Hopeless, Yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hand, of Ar'ton, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally developed in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth I would meet my Maker with those above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me, and I thank God I am now as well and sturdy woman." Trial bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co's. Regular size, 50 cents and $1.00.

Local News.

—A Merry Christmas to all.

—Last Saturday was the shortest day in the year.

—J. J. Bennett has taken a $2,000 log contract of the East Jordan Lumber Co.

—Miss Clara Alexius is clerking for A. T. Washburne during the holidays.

—Miss Esther Buttars left Saturday for Hillsdale, where she will spend the holidays.

—Dennis Blakely, of Eastport, has an increase of pension; also Henry L. Dyer, of Horton's Bay.

—Ray Erickson went to the Soo Friday and will be there until the first week in January.

—Mrs. Estella King arrived last night to spend the winter with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Brown.

—Superintendent Elton left Monday, for Grand Rapids, to attend the State Teachers Association Convention.

—Alfred H. Otis, son of A. H. Otis, of South Arm, has entered the employ of Judge Mayne, at this place, clerk.

—To morrow will be Christmas. That day will bring joy to all its readers in the earnest sense of the SENTINEL.

—Nicholls, Lewis & Bates last week purchased of E. Trimble, in Marion, 80 acres of timbered land in that township.

—Bert Scott, a prominent Wisconsin Republican editor-at-large, died recently. He was a brother-in-law of W. H. Downer—Mrs. Scott being a sister of Mrs. Downer.

—Ben Davis, the eccentric Pilgrim of Elk Rapids, will take the part of King in the forthcoming Oratorio of "Queen Esther." Mr Davis is a splendid singer, will open into the music loving citizens of Charlevoix.

—Will C. VanPelt, son of Geo. H. VanPelt, of Norwood, passed through town Tuesday on his way to spend his holiday vacation with his parents. He is a traveling salesman for Hibard, spencer & Bartlett, of Chicago.

—The many friends of "Corporal" Thos. Kelley, of this place, will be glad to learn that he has been granted a pension of $12 per month from August last. He has an application in for his wife, which he stands a good chance of getting.

—At a recent meeting of the Marine Engineers' Association, the following officers were elected: President, Robert O'Neill; Vice President, Ed. Gifford; Secretary, Ed. Grandy; Cor. Sec., G. S. Washburn; Fin. Sec., John Ackers; Treasurer, John Kelly; Conductor, Geo. Pappin.

—S. E. Lackey, of Elk Rapids, one of the best baritone singers in the state, will assume the character of Haman in Wm. B. Bradbury's grand sacred work, "Queen Esther." As a singer, Mr. Lackey has more than a local reputation, and the people of Charlevoix may look for a finished rendition of the part.

—The oratorio of "Esther" will be produced about Jan. 23d and 24th, and will be the biggest musical event in the history of Charlevoix. The amount of practice six required for the successful presentation, but success is already certain. The costumes which will be elegant, will be procured from a Detroit costumer.

—A memorial meeting in memory of the life and services of Caleb Pecle Gates, which June 5 last was held in Chicago one evening last week, under the auspices of the Chicago Congregational Club, the Chicago City Missionary Society, and the Chicago Theological Seminary. The audience was composed almost exclusively of former friends and co-workers of the dead churchman. Mr. S. M. Moore presided.

—The northern Michigan Schoolmasters' club was organized at Petoskey recently with the following officers: President, G. R. Cutler, of Lakeside; vice president, H. M. Frost, of Charlevoix; Secretary, M. O. Graves, of Petoskey; Treasurer, E. B. Brooks, of Mancelona; executive committee, J. M. Harris, of Boyne City, E. F. Waldo, of Harbor Springs, Miss E. Hamilton, of Cheboygan.

—The recent Indian troubles in the west, awaken recollections of the late Captain Walter Clifford, whose home was practically in Charlevoix. He was an officer of the 7th Infantry, which regiment is now at the seat of war. Captain Clifford's company was in the column that arrived at the Rosebud the day following the Custer massacre, and that officer saw several savages in that campaign as well as in others. After Sitting Bull had returned across the Canadian border and sent in a courier conveying his desire to surrender, Captain Clifford was detailed to go out and bring in the hostiles. Col. Gibbon instructed Clifford to take his company as an escort, but Clifford asked to be permitted to take only one sergeant and an interpreter, which request was granted. Clifford, when he met the great chief, unbuckled his belt which carried his revolver and threw it on the ground between them, as a token of peace, but the wary Indian did not know that the Captain had a "bulldog" revolver concealed in his sleeve attached to a rubber cord, carrying ball, to test the courage of the "white chief," asked, in substance, "what if I should turn you at the stake?" The captain replied, "You dare not; the soldiers of the Great Father would follow you to the end of the earth and hang you." The chief smiled and, with his entire band, surrendered. Clifford to head-quarters. When the officer asked Capt. Clifford what his purpose was in concealing a revolver in his sleeve he replied that it, the first sign of treachery on the part of Sitting Bull, he would have shot him, and then tried his best to do as much for himself and his life as he could. The last evening that Capt. Clifford spent in Charlevoix was at the residence of the writer, to whom these incidents were related. The great chief afterward became a true friend of Clifford and his family and expressed his pony and accoutrements to him, Clifford, but a mutual departed, taking the pony with him. Mrs. Clifford presented the writer with the photographs from life of Sitting Bull, Gall, Long Dog, and Crow King. Some person has surreptitiously received the Sitting Bull picture, but the latter arrived, in our possession, together with the deserted tepee of Sitting Bull. Capt. Clifford was one of the most experienced and trusted Indian fighters in the service, and, were he alive now would be taking a conspicuous part in the present Indian troubles.

Fish Scales.

Everybody has "pulled out" and laid up.

Fishermen all agree that the season's catch has not been entirely satisfactory.

Capt. C. Gilkes left Thursday with the tug Jaquith for Frankfort, where he will do some late fishing, lay up there and go again in the spring before the ice leaves here.

Rodgers & Co. are making Charlevoix their headquarters, and their immense plant is here for a winter's work. There are few larger fishing ports on the great lakes. They have leased the Emery building, and will have a force of from six to eight men, engaged all winter in mending old nets and assuming new ones. They have a ten of new tackle ordered on the cars, which will soon be scattered into new nets this winter. The endless cable of nets next season will stretch 134 miles. Their steam craft here will be generally overhauled; the City of Marquette and tug Rodgers will both receive new wheels. One of their tugs goes to Lake Superior in the spring, and the other will fish here or at the Soo.

"It is a mistake to suppose," said Mr. E. G. Rodgers to the writer, "that fishing in the spawning season is detrimental to the fishing interest. It is true that some spawn is destroyed. But there is a fact that the public do not stop to consider. At all the large fisheries, the U. S. Fish Commissioners follow up the fishing outfits and secure the spawn. The hatching of this spawn has been reduced to a science; so that, the results say, at least 90 per cent of it is hatched, and the fry, or small fish, deposited in the lakes. Nine of these fries develop. In the process of nature, probably half of the spawn, if not more, is destroyed by suckers and other fish. Therefore I say there are more fish hatched by reason of fishing in the spawning season than there would be if it was prohibited."

Detroit Marine Notes.

The Clare Bellle laid up Monday.

The biggest gale of the year yesterday.

The season's record of the Sault Canal is the greatest of its existence, having a grand total of 9,041,000 tons as against 7,500,000, last year, an increase of 20 per cent. The canal was operated 226 days, 6 less than last year.

The lake captains are beginning to talk seriously about some of the islands along the North shore, who they claim, when a boat gets into distress in that vicinity, do not hesitate to turn pirates and rob her of what they can lug away.

The steamer White Star on her last trip loaded with iron ore, left Escanaba with thirty tons of fuel. She spent one day at Elk Rapids, made the run to Cleveland, where she remained five days, and on returning to Port Huron with a head wind went of the time she had about two and a half tons left out of the thirty tons. The boat had a full head of steam all the time. So runs the story.

The experiment of "pouring oil on the troubled waters," is saying that has some twelve centuries behind it, was tried successfully on the steamship Miranda last week when she was off Cape Cause Atlantic Ocean, in a dogsitial tempest. As a last expedient pitrolline oil was poured over the bulwarks. It acted like a charm. The waves were stilled, and the ship saved, as her master believes, from foundering. Numerous experiments have proved the utility of this plan of sailcloth for an endangered ship, and the wonder is it has not had more extensive trial.

Never in the history of Charlevoix harbor, has there been so many craft, both steam and sail, laid up here as this winter. The list embraces the following: Steam craft, steamers City of Marquette, Lem Cummings, Grant ama, North Star, Clara Belle, Jos. Gordon, Lottie; tugs, Minnie Warner, Higgie, Avery, Martin, Hanson, Gusta, Endress; schooners, Lottie Mason, Florence M. Smith, Sea Gull. The most significant feature of it is that 75 per cent of these are to undergo more or less rebuild, and both yards will be kept busy with forces of men all winter.

Capt. A. S. Bosman, the veteran commander of the Goodrich steamer Menominee, of the Chicago, Grand Haven & Muskegon line, was interviewed by a Grand Rapids reporter lately. The captain talks proudly of a new steamer which he is to command next season. She is being built at Buffalo at a cost of $120,000 and will take the Menominee's place at the opening of navigation, the Menominee going on the West Shore and Manistee route. The new craft will be a beauty, a fitting mate for the City of Racine. She will be called either Dakota or Nevada. Capt. Bosman has sailed the lakes since 1854, and is full of anecdotes of the old times when the sailor was obliged to cruise about for hours to sight of the little black house at the mouth of the creek, where now stands Chicago, afterwards unloading by lighters, when Grand Haven was the only safe harbor on the west shore, and lighthouses on Lake Michigan were an unknown blessing to the mariner.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

TERSE REVIEW OF THE ANNUAL OFFICIAL EDITIONS.

Gen. Harrison's Recommendations to Congress—Brief Review of the Departmental Reports—Not Pessimist in Sober Line With His Party on Timely Issues.

(Boston Post.)

The second annual message of President Harrison is a comprehensive review of the affairs of the government during the past year. It is compatible in expansion of satisfaction with existing conditions which continue to be promoting and encouraging to the country. Its opinions are intelligent and thoughtful, and its recommendations generally sound and judicious. In a word, it is a candid, straightforward presentation of facts, views and suggestions which ought to relieve the attention of every citizen, and which are made in a spirit of sound economy and general cheer.

The president refers at the outset to the success of the administration in examining the vast business of the government so as to have almost wholly escaped unfavorable criticism. Fidelity and integrity marking to an exceptional degree the operations of every department, for all of which the credit is given to the chiefs of departments and the faithful officers and employees under them. It is a great tribute which is thus paid to all connected with the administration of the business of the government, and the popular judgment will not fail to accord to the chief executive his share of the credit for the honorable record of faithful and honest performance of duty. Its force both of example and influence be multiplied by having over the office of our business the ever-present idea that we are responsible to God, and the references to the Divine Ruler in the closing paragraphs, notwithstanding which the concerns the president says of the new silver law that some of its features may yet will be necessary to determine the performance effect of the legislation upon silver values, but he regards it as gratifying that the commercial interests concerned by the act has entered and will continue to act upon it in the belief that upon business and general values. While it has not been seen as a sweet note international conference regarding silver, the nations have abroad has been carefully observed and no favorable opportunity for it has yet been lost, yet none a full use of silver among the nations for exchange as the ratio, the reasonableness of opinions on this subject the president thinks it may be hoped to be suggested by the recent monetary disturbances in Europe, and that a large supply of gold is not lost in impulsive legislation in the supposed interest of silver we shall be in a position of advantage in promoting a general and safe international agreement for the free use of both as a coin. Upon this the president clearly implies that he does not favor free coinage.

Regarding the new tariff law the president is distinctive in his views, that he believes it should not be interfered with, in the present session of congress, and declares that there is neither wisdom nor justice in the contention that the subjects of tariff reform should be opened before the law has had a fair trial and expresses the opinion that "it will justify the support of those who believe that American legislation should conserve and defend American trade and the wages of American workmen." The whole argument of the message is directed against any changes in the law at the present time, and the ground is taken that the tariff law will be sustained by the majority in congress, and that it will prove to be the security desired by tariff act, and the right of the nation, maintained by reciprocal treaties, which trade commissions, which it is held does not mean that other nations are due to others or what it means, "that the Turgid nations claimed in reciprocal treaties. Regarding this much discussed question, the president holds that what is given to one nation for an adequate surrender of equivalent is due to every other nation, which is entitled to the same by another treaty. It is stated that the indications for a general tariff agitation by the countries from which we import our large imports of coffee and sugar are very hopeful, and it is believed it will mean commercial war with those countries can be promptly improved and adjusted. The next year will show a most gratifying increase in our exports of manufactures and products, as well as of some important linseed manufactures.

The president makes an argument for the "development of our existing appropriating for a federal supervising or inspection and inspection, which it is to be hoped that he would approve the election bill which has passed the house and is now in the senate. The passage of an appropriation bill at the present session is recommended, and also legislation for the distribution of American steamship lines, for the relief of the supreme court, for affording copyright protection to foreign authors, for requiring railroads engaged in interstate commerce to use safety appliances, for empowering the postoffice department to use or experiment the advantages of a postal telegraph system, and for adopting a national bankruptcy law.

The message concludes with a review of the foreign relations, and a tribute to congress to exercise care in the preparation of appropriation bills and not to waste its energy time remaining for the consideration of less important matters.

TWO IMPORTANT BILLS.

(Chicago Inter-Ocean.)

There are two bills of overshadowing importance which, the dockets bill, which has passed the house, and is pending in the senate, and the superintendent bill which has not been framed yet, and from the nature of the case could not be until the total population of the United States and been definitely determined. It is not easy to discriminate between the two in their relative importance. At first one would say that the former was quite overshadowed by the latter, as it is more ponderous, and that would be a great overshadowing, while the latter relates to a subject which is of a delicate character. An superintendent bill has been framed and made an issue between the two parties.

It is perfectly obvious that the democratic party intends to make the superintendent thus they do about the election bill. When they speak without reserve it is substantially in this wise: It does not matter much if we do take from the supervision of congressional elections. We can elect presidential electors in the several legislatures of the south, and thus escape the necessity of the trouble and defeat in practical operation; but when it comes to apportionment, which at all, would increase the republican vote for president at least twenty seven over which it would be under one superintendent of the census. There is no E. A way to evade the practical operation of a new apportionment of congress by postponing it until after the next presidential election, as the admission of the new states will be delayed until after the election of president. If such postponement can be tided over this winter it will be easy enough thereafter, for the next house of representatives will be democratic.

There is another difference between superintendent and superintendent, some republicans are opposed to trying to secure honest elections at the south by national intervention. They do not think it can be done. The number is small, and even that little band of opposition yield after to the judgment of the majority, especially in view of the very positive language of this last national republican convention. In the matter of appointment there will be no two opinions in republican circles, provided only the bill does not cut down the present representation of the south. We do not want an increase that of most. Every republican can be relied upon to sincerely support the measure, assuming that it shall not be open to the objection just alluded to, and which can be easily obviated.

It is an open question how far congress can go in preventing gerrymandering. It has the constitutional authority necessary to the prohibition of it, but it may be inexpedient so to do. The effective it is as provided by the last apportionment, which is a model of fairness. The number of the census committee, Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, and Mr. Cooper, provides could be made as to squareness and symmetry, but the improvements could be made without having large disturbance, many latitude for state authorities. Much more that could be done would be to copy the anti-gerrymander provisions of our Illinois state constitution, which reads: "Senatorial and representative districts shall be formed of contiguous compact territory bounded by county lines, and contain, as nearly as practicable, an equal number of inhabitants." The little account can be taken in the congressional act of population of states especially as the returns of 1890 could not be much of a guide to the politics of the decade. "Compact" should be added to "contiguous" and that is about all that need be done in that line.

We should be on our guard against blind in balancing the pound and ounce of seven-day details. If it will only have two bills this congress will go into history as the most important and useful of any session, notwithstanding what is to concerns the president says of the new silver law that some of its features may yet will be necessary to determine the performance effect of the legislation upon silver values, but he regards it as gratifying that the commercial interests concerned by the act has entered and will continue to act upon it in the belief that upon business and general values. DR. TALMAGE PREACHES A SERMON ON DAMASCUS.

How the Modern City is Unlike the Ancient One—One Road to Mohammedanism—The Dilapidated Fact is Not Greater than Some Modern Dilemmas.

In the New York Academy of Music Dr. Talmage delivered the eleventh sermon in a series of sermons on the Bible and adjoining countries. The subject was "Damascus," and the text, "Are Abana and Pharpar better than all the waters of Israel?" Kings, v., 12.

In Palestine we spent last night in a Damascus house, with fine marble floor and shops in the basement. Yet never in my life have I felt more like a beast than when we attempted to sleep on that floor. I felt as if I had to crawl to stay in rest, as we expected to do that night, we must have gone to a Turkish bath and opened open, as its valleys of hail and snow and rain and wind as it let us know what the little moan when prophet and evangelist and Christ blessed spoke of the fury of the elements.

Yesterday afternoon, we had come on about midnight in the afternoon, and on the small table were fruits of the orchards and fresh vegetables and cool water chilled to the same.

Our first day on arrival was the repetition of the exhaustion of our party. We were now within a mile from the stone without any to be without a change of raiment. If we had been called to the ministry of the Christian without a change of raiment, we would have had to go out but God. I hear the voice of God saying to me, "Go forward." Come, come, come to your vocation! God is strong in you. Do not be afraid of the lions in your way. Do not be afraid of the lions in your way. Do not be afraid of the lions in your way

Hill can carry New York state and Cleveland cannot. That is why the Democrats, if they are shrewd, should nominate Hill.

The senate doesn't seem to have courage enough to pass the Election bill or kill it. It should do one or the other and go on with business.

It is reported at Lansing that Mrs. Harriet A. Tenney, for years State librarian there, is to be removed by the Democrats and that Mrs. Custer, widow of the brave Custer, will be tendered the vacant place.

The United States Senate is going to be as slow about doing anything to meet pressing emergencies as it was last session. It seems as if the recent cyclone might to have waked it up at least. Democratic dynamite will do it to-night if the recent warning is not heeded.

The Democratic party in this State has demanded in most extravagant terms what it called Republican misrule and extravagance in the management of public affairs, and has promised great reforms if intrusted with power. As they were in an almost hopeless minority, they felt safe in thus trifling up the powers that were. Now the tables are turned, and we shall see what more they make toward reforms.

The Lewisville Courier-Journal says there is plenty of money, but it being hoarded, and that, among other things the development of the money market is partly due to the large pension roll. It could have been nothing less than bitter hatred of the pension list that prompted the Courier-Journal to make so ridiculous a statement. It must imagine that its party is ready to swallow any preposterous statement that comes with the prestige of the great Courier-Journal back of it. There is nothing like the pension list to set the money ball rolling less than bitter hatred of the pension list that prompted the Courier-Journal to make so ridiculous a statement. It must imagine that its party is ready to swallow any preposterous statement that comes with the prestige of the great Courier-Journal back of it. There is nothing like the pension list to set the money freely among the people. Ninety nine per cent of the pensioners cannot hoard their paltry stipends, but have to spend them on the necessaries of life.

Sitting Bull.

At last the United States is rid of a most troublesome enemy, who for the past 20 years has been the chief cause of the northwestern Indian troubles.

In chronicling the death of Sitting Bull we pause only to remark that it came too late to not bereaved. Sitting Bull, the Sioux chief was born about 1837. He was the principle chief of the Dakota Sioux, who were driven from their reservation in the Black Hills by miners in 1876, and took up arms against the whites and friendly Indians, refusing to be transported to the Indian territory.

In July and August, 1876, in a conference at standing Rock, Dak., he influenced his tribe to refuse to relinquish Indian lands. If we can credit the stories about him he was an assassin and a coward. One of his first exploits was to kill his brother, who stood between him and the leadership of the Sioux. His craft and impudence were two of his leading qualities. Unfaced by his own immorality, he was blindly followed by the Sioux.

Sitting Bull was hostile, sagacious and unrelenting. He never associated with the government of the United States over his people, but persistently fought the troops whenever they came in his way. He felt that the white man was his natural enemy and possessed a underlying bitterness over the younger portion of his own race. He finally surrendered to the United States forces on the 19th of July, 1881.

Sitting Bull began his eventful career as a "medicine man" and the Custer episode marked the zenith of his fame and the beginning of his retrogression. He did not have the reputation of a warrior to aid him, but gained ascendancy as a "medicine man," a prophet, a preacher, a teacher, a politician. His influence was working such deleterious effects among the agency Indians that finally the department at Washington was obliged to take prompt measures to prevent a general outbreak among the friendly Indian tribes. Had Sitting Bull and his followers were captured into the reservation.

Sitting Bull, with all his cunning and his influence, his eloquence and his organizing, has now gone to the "happy hunting grounds" of his fathers, and one of the conspicuous lights in the Indian nation has perished in obscurity.

The Leelanaw County Agricultural Society has elected N. W. Herrington president; A. L. Dennison, secr'ary, and Joseph Hewett, treasurer. The Society is out of debt and has a balance of $100 in the treasury.

Cheboygan Tribune: Joseph Rife, who is a pioneer in this county, and owns a fine farm on Mullet lake, informs us that the past season he raised 250 bushels of corn in the car off of three acres of land. He considers corn one of the most profitable crops a farmer can raise in this county.

There is not a vacant store room in Cheboygan building, and a new one is going up on the corner of Main and Bellaire. The fact that the C. & W. M. and Ward's railroad will be built this winter and the recent warning is not heeded.

CREATURES OF THE DEEP.

Every body will remember the United States Fish Commission steamer Albatross and the wonderful collections of fishes and marine curiosities on board of which was such an attraction.

The Albatross has been cruising in Behring Sea and that vicinity and is now in San Francisco, where the specimens collected during the trip have been boxed up and forwarded to Washington where they will be examined and classified.

The Examiner says there were enough boxes to fill a car and many of the specimens are rare to the scientists and the voyagers feel quite elated with their success. They brought many queer looking and found places where sprawns and starfishes may be scooped up by the bushels.

The oddest thing in the catch is an acellian enthroned on the back of a crab smaller than itself. For a long time after the capture of the two they were kept in the aquarium on board, and the antics of the oddly assorted twosome afforded a good deal of amusement.

The crab is a small fellow, an inch and a half in diameter.

For the benefit of the uncurious it may be stated that an acellian is an animal without a head or backbone. This particular acellian resembles a miniature balloon, the bag being about two inches long, a fewer ten inches long like a reed connects it with the crab. This little odd mate of the sea on the crab raises and lowers himself by sucking in and expelling water.

The crab had been pretty well broken up by the stranger rider when captured, but in its next quarters it renewed his efforts to shake off the parasite. It rolled over, vainly rubbed the sides of the separation and once it managed to grasp in its jaw the tentacle to which the bobbing balloon clung to it.

The crab began jostling to pull himself along the coral, claw over claw. He did it gingerly, for it was a risky climb. The acellian inflated itself, and scared off the length of the coral. The crab kept clawing and after a great time reached the main section of his enemy. He fiercely jabbed his pincers at him, but it didn't do him much harm. An acellian hasn't any arms, head or legs, but is simply a bag. Adding the limp skin didn't harm it much, for the crab found that out and quit operations.

For some time he nickely obeyed the acellian whenever the latter wanted a ride. His spirit, however, was broken and he died shortly afterward. This is was discovered that the acellian had grown on to the back of the crab and became a part of him, as it were. The two are still firmly linked, but they are to alcohol.

The specimen starfish has a black disk like body the size of a half dollar. From the edge project five serpentine fingers six inches in length. It is lithe, active and vicious, and makes things unpleasant for the small fry that venture within reach of its long sinuous arms.

There's a little squid on board scarcely two feet long, but he is the pigmy counterpart of the one captured on the Atlantic seaboard that measured several feet and weighed something over 400 pounds.

A queer-looking fish is the pipefish, from eight to twelve inches long and slightly slimmer than a lead pencil.

The most healthy-looking oddities on board are the pair of young eagles. They were captured while still in do by during a trip on shore. Now they are full-grown, very tame, and insist on overlooking and investigating all the queer things that the dredging net flings on the deck.

Passion and Poetry.

There's nothing in the world like rhymes to cool off a man's passion. You look at a blackcomb working on a bit of iron or steel. Bright enough it looked while it was on the forge, in the midst of the sparkling, the great bellows blowing away, and the red-hot iron shone as red as a rose or white as the burning coals. How it frizzles as it goes into the trough of water, and how suddenly all the glow is gone! It looks black and cold enough now. Just so with your passionate incendiary. It is all well while it burns and scintillates in your emotional eyes, without articulate and connected expression; but the minute you plunge it into the rhyme-trough it cools down and becomes as dead and dull as the cold horseshoe. It is true that if you lay it cold on the anvil and hammer away on it for awhile it warms up somewhat. Just so with the rhyming fellow,—he commences away on his verses, and they warm up a little. But don't he kin think that this afterglow of composition is the same thing as the original passion. The fond expression in a few ink oils, or, as, dew, shows, fetter, letters, and when the passion had turned itself out you got the rhymed verses, which, as I have said, are its ashes.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic.

Taking the Census in India.

Apropos the coming census, a contemporary is reminded of an old story which went the round of the last census period. During the taking of the census in India in 1881 in a district in the central provinces some of the tribes took fright and ran away. The district officer finally enlisted their head men to listen to explanations. Being on the fact that wagers of cattle, bulls figure extensively in Indian folklore, he solemnly assured them that the Queen of England and the Emperor of Russia, having quarrelled as to which ruled over the most subjects, had laid a big bet on the point. He went on to explain that the census was being taken in order to settle the bet, and he warned his hearers in a spirited peroration that, if they stood in the jungle and refused to be counted, the Queen would lose her money, and they would be dangerous forever, as mutiny-lovers, or traitors to their salt. The story served its purpose and the tribes came in.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Journalist's Mistake.

Moritz Saphir, the witty Austrian journalist, was once standing in a crowded theater. Some one leaned on his back, thrusting his head over his shoulders. Saphir drew out his handkerchief and swung the man's nose violently. The latter stamped back: "Oh, I beg your pardon," said Saphir, "I thought it was mine."—Short Cuts.

When the railway across Siberia is completed it is estimated that the tour of the world in fifty days will be feasible.

SECOND-HAND SHOES

Where They Come From, Where They Are Sold, and What They Cost.

Nearly everything is sold at second hand in New York says the Sun. It is easy to understand why there is a market for old rye, for pianos for jewelry, and for clothing for scotch prices are high and vary a great deal, but shoes are sold so cheap, when, next that trade is slow, that a second hand should be sought. Yet it is a fact that there is a very large trade in second-hand boots and shoes, mostly shoes, because boots are worn by few at present. The second-hand shoe stores are in basements in the poorest quarters of the city. They are generally in the neighborhood of second-hand clothing stores, but are distinct from them. Sometimes however, bargains in second-hand shoes are to be found in second-hand clothing stores, but they are old price, and an assortment is seldom supplied. On the east side and in the First ward are many second-hand shoe stores, and in the band at Sixth avenue and Christie street is quite a colony. Many of them are kept by Hebrews, and almost invariably the proprietor is a cobbler, who occupies his time mending shoes, either for his own customers or some other shop. All sorts and sizes of shoes, representing the fashions of the past ten years or longer, may be found for all ages and both sexes. They are kept clean and blacked.

Many of these shoes are from ash barrels and garbage boxes, having been thrown away by people who can afford to do so. About the first of May there is a harvest of old shoes, thrown out by lady housekeepers and picked up by the ragpickers, who follow in the wake of the second-hand shops. Many men buy cheap shoes purposely and throw them out on the street, shoes a long time. Some are found in one of the barrel of salt. As long as shoes are repairable on the uppers they are of service to the second-hand men, who patiently cobble and blacken and make them worth selling.

Some of the second-hand shoe shops are patronized by Hebrews, others by Italians, and some by colored people. Many customers get shoes from their employers and keep them mended, thereby getting better articles than they could afford to buy.

The prices of these second-hand shoes are low. It is almost a rule that the price will be one dollar, no more than the cost of mending. Twenty-five cents is the price for an unusual price. A dollar a pair is a large price. The cost of shoes is one of the heaviest burdens to poor families. Old clothes may be patched and turned, passed along from to another, or made over, but the shoes require to be new every time, and the amount of money spent in shoes, and the amount of shoe leather used, is astonishing, and by healthy youngsters is appalling.

The second-hand trade in second-hand shoes among peddlers. They usually purchase in lots, and have to travel through the country. Many of the shoes are from second-hand shops on a large scale, and are purchased by the hundred by peddlers who have regular customers in the country, who are in need of footwear. In the last second-hand shoe shop I visited, there were shoes for women, men, children, of all ages, of the most fashionable and of the most antique pattern in the style. Bathrooms, Sunday, Sundays, and holidays second hand shoe shops are thrifty persons who have money to invest in small sums, money in some unique, and do not disdain to increase or by buying second-hand articles.

A WOMAN EDITOR.

She Calls All Her Stuff Plain, Simple, Unvarnished Truth.

The editress of the Women's Penny Paper, a London publication, is a true lover of her sex. In the N. Y. Herald She and her staff work together on the same table, and do all the work. Not only are all the articles written by women, but the compositors are women, the office boy is a woman, and so is the junior editor and telegrapher. The editress has but one name for her office—"home." The assistant editor is called "my dear," but the rest of the help answer to plain and simple but sweet and short "dear." The work is done in a quiet, orderly, a middle-of-the-road, a woman cook, and your "lady" is the "proprietor." Who put up the jellies, jams, preserves, and pickles last summer, from which she realizes half the profits of her enterprise? Who dressed in the fashions and general worthlessness of the fashionable lady? Who made the male labor, and an avalanche of bottles and boxes? Who made the fire? Who? Many of the appliances for the office are the work of the daughters of clergymen. She made her wholesale and has since spent the profits of her enterprise in the system, and the warm up a little. But don't let him think that this aforegiven of composition is the same thing as the original passion. The fond expression in a few ink oils, or, as, dew, shows, fetter, letters, and when the passion had turned itself out you got the rhymed verses, which, as I have said, are its ashes.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY,

Unexcelled in Fertility! A Wealth of Timber! One Hundred Miles of Navigable Coast-Line!

CHARLEVOIX, as the entrepot and outlet of a region bordering 90 miles of navigable inland coast, possesses elements of commercial importance that only require railroad connection to make it the business center of Northern Michigan. A railroad is assured! Study the map of Charlevoix county, and the relation it bears to Charlevoix harbor. Railroad connection with our city of Charlevoix county, and the, means concentration and enlargement of trade, transfer of travel and shipping, lines of north-shore and inland steamers and investment in manufactures. The map says so!

A MAN WHO DIDN'T STRIKE.

Sixty Years a Switchman on the Central Ry. Guarding the Two Engineers.

[Boston Transcript.]

Down at Stockbridge, on the Central Hudson, there is employed a gentleman who now being on his good days, has been for sixty years, all of the time, and had been in the employ of the road, and has seen the road grow from the days when the train was held only by two spikes and a rail.

This man did not strike when Lincoln's arbitrary order was issued for the freeing of Aug. 8. He is not made of that sort of stuff of which men who can think blindly follow the lead, and will if an unfriendly leader. Old Patrick Sweeney remained in the road which he has faithfully guarded for nearly sixty years.

Although he is slightly influenced by mental powers have a natural vigor that is remarkable. Every one who passes knows or by observing what it is he knows, who could not read or write a word to call the service. Pat goes a long in his shanty to reach him from the standpoint of the engineer or fireman, and report the time and number of trains that passed by that point every day. The old man had apparently passed the age when he could read or be learned hark, and thought to grasp what it meant, or even the purpose of the work, but his eyes was still keen. In less than a month he knew the meaning of the signals, when were displayed and what they meant and he was proud of the fact that he was

THIRD DAY IN CONGRESS.

Dull Times Among the National Law-Makers at Washington.

In the Senate, the resolution offered by Mr. Plumb for daily meetings of the Senate while Congress is in session, was taken up on the 11th. Mr. Cockrell suggested that if it is to be voted on the hour of meeting there would be no quorum. Mr. Plumb said he had consulted a number of the Republican Senators who consider the work could be done. In one questioned the advisability of night sessions and the practicability of an attendance of a quorum. Mr. Hoar said he was in favor of the resolution, but, in contrast with the House, he would be glad to have the Senate adjourn from Friday morning until Monday. He moved to release from the Treasury of the United States at San Francisco, the bones recovered in the payment of forged checks.

WAS A BOLD ROBBER.

"Bill the Brute," a Notorious Character, Caught at Last.

CLARK PARKER, the notorious criminal known in the police of America and Europe as "Bill the Brute," was arrested at Boston awaiting the pleasure of the Philadelphia police, who charge him with stealing a diamond ring. Parker has had an extraordinary career, and has much to answer for. His robbery of Mr. Vanderbilt, on Staten Island, on Lenox Avenue, in New York, and in Paris, of the bonds of Treasury notes as fast as they were issued, and his attempt to rob the Bank of Montreal, are all famous robberies. Some time later one of the men who had helped him to do the job went to the graveyard to get the money he stolen. They quarreled there, and Parker, hoping to get the entire proceeds, drew a revolver and shot his companion, the bullet badly injuring the latter in the right side. His victim was taken to a drug store, and, instead of succumbing to his wound, he, has done so, produce as he lay on the ground and fired repeatedly at the running form of Parker. The latter, fearing that people would be attracted to the scene of the shooting, and, cover of Gloriety's revolver, promised not only to divide the money but to make Gloriety and take him safely from the country.

TOOK HIS EMPLOYERS' MONEY.

Crime of a Young Man in a Boston Broker's Office.

HENRY G. BIRD, cashier for T. H. Perkins & Co., the Devonshire street (Boston) brokers, has turned out a defaulter, the amount involved being more than $17,000. Bird is about 26 years old, but he manifested unusual ability as a financier in handling the stock. A vault was that from a checkbook he was placed in charge of the stock, bonds and funds. Besides, considerable trouble was caused over to him. A few months ago it was learned that Bird was spending money on the outside. Upon the overhaul of his books, but, finding everything satisfactory he was allowed to handle the money of which they knowing. Later, however, it was found some money were missed, and he was charged with falsifying the accounts. Excuses were placed on the books, and a shortage of $2,200 was found. Bird had manipulated the accounts so he disappeared, and his friends said he was robbed his employers. Bird's father was called upon to make good the shortage, but he did not, and he is now in jail. She said it could be allowed to put the criminal behind the bars, and he will be compelled to repay the entire amount.

A CARNIVAL OF CRIME.

Murders and a Suicide Charged to an Arkansas Man.

CHARLES ARMAGE, a Swede, who lived at Jenny Lind, two miles from Fort Smith, Ark., shot and killed John Miller, Miller's wife and grown daughter, Lou Miller. He, Sheets, a prominent physician, and a man whose name is not learned, the prisoner is in custody, afterward he shot and killed himself. The massacre occurred late in the day and the only guess as to the cause of the awful tragedy is that Mr. Sheets had interfered in behalf of the wife of Mr. Miller's downfall.

WHAT INDIANA FARMERS WANT.

The Indiana State Grange, after meeting at Lafayette, adopted resolutions favoring the repeal of the law exempting building and loan associations from taxation; the immediate taking effect of the law excluding aliens from free and unrestricted college of the repeal of the national bank law, and in favor of the issue of Treasury notes as fast legal tender in sufficient quantities to transact the business of the country on a cash basis; the taxation of land, and the nonexclusive of life; the exemption of farm life insurance from taxation; the equal rights of both sexes.

Fund for Needy Soldiers.

SUPERVISOR for distribution among the needy and worst condition of Soldiers in the beginning is active in Illinois. Considerable food and fuel has gone through there, distributed for points where the greatest need exists. Consultations are striving to get the supplies in which the pleasant weather continues. A vast amount will be necessary to meet the present demand.

Strikers Turned Out of Doors.

EVICTIONS of striking miners have been begun at the Hillsdale Coal and Iron Co. in West Virginia. The strike has become alarming in its proportions. The men at the Monkton and Dorpard works have joined the strikers, and some 2,000 men are now out. The union is working a production of 3 tons per day. The mines are controlled by Cincinnati, by which co-operative capital, Gov. Fleming, and Senator Gorman, of Maryland, are largely interested.

EASTERN OCCURRENCES.

A meeting in Boston of the stockholders of the Kansas Pacific Company, and the Chase Refrigerator Company, and the Cold Blast Transportation Company, of Kansas City, it was decided to resume business. These companies were assigned about two weeks ago in Chicago. E. Ferrington, of Boston, stockholders declined to advance 33½ per cent. on the capital stock and pay all of the liabilities, which are over $1,000,000.

Mr. Jules Jaquet, a Piquet-in-Spiral Lang, of the Hudson Field Farm, plus, at Dunbar, Pa., charging him with criminal responsibility for the death of the miners, came before the Grand Jury, and the bill was ignored. The failure of the prosecution will have a disheartening effect on the suits for damage against the company.

The belief is general in the leather district and financial circles at Albany, N. Y., that the sum embezzled by George B. Allison, bookkeeper for Henry W. Sage & Co., leather dealers, who suspended on the 10th, will be much larger than the amount up to about $700,000. By means of false bills of lading he managed to have whole hundreds of leather turned over to his accomplices. The firm is rapidly losing $500,000. The Sun Insurance Company, of London, will be the heaviest sufferer, and a subscription list was circulated in the Stock Exchange for him. About $2,000 was realized.

FRANK SOMERS and John Trapper, miners, were fatally injured in a premature explosion in the Tech Tree Mine at Greensburg, Pa.

WESTERN HAPPENINGS.

THREE masked men bound and gagged William Jackson, night watchman of the Wiswasa Theater at Fort Wayne, Ind., and then proceeded to open the safe with keys. According to Jackson, they had opened an hour and a half before that succeeded in opening it whence they took $1,500 in silver, several watches, and some stage jewelry valued at $1,000. After the robbery they placed Jackson managed to release himself and notified the police.

At the annual meeting of the Michigan State Grange, at Ann Arbor, 400 present, the largest attendance in the history of the organization. In his annual address the Worthy Master referred to the increased interest the order is paying the work attention to the raising of crops and contended that the farmer, laws of supply and demand, will be governed by the laws of supply and demand. Officers were elected the State's Chief Master, Mr. Jerome Wood, of Ann Arbor, Grange, and there is now a strong sentiment in favor of the selection of a lady for the position.

The Fall Executive Committee of the Iowa Farmers' Alliance was in session in Des Moines, and in the report of consultation with the State Grange, the work was agreed upon. The officers of the Alliance are to be elected at the next meeting of the Grange, and it is understood that steps will be taken to unite the two organizations in the future. The Grange and Alliance will unite in a mass meeting, organized the bullet badly injuring the latter in the right side. The latter was not a coward, instead of succumbing to his wound, he, has done a number as he lay on the ground and fired repeatedly at the running form of Parker. The latter, fearing that people would be attracted to the scene of the shooting, and, cover of Gloriety's revolver, promised not only to divide the money but to make Gloriety and take him safely from the country.

Great Britain Has Got All the Glory, Which Some Insinuate the Chicago Show Will Do for Uncle Sam—Great Prominence Also Given to Exhibits and Exhibitors at the Successive Expositions of the Century.

Great Britain seems to have the quickest nation to take advantage of the chances offered by a World's Fair. A study of each World's Fair seems to show that the General Government, $500,000 of which is in the valley of Snake River, a large stream, navigable in places for steamboats. In the interest of Mr. Mc-Kenzie, of California, the House passed the bill appropriating $1,000 to pay the heirs Chinese Minister, Tong King Sing, late Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, for losses incurred in the payment of forged checks.

A DANGEROUS AGENT.

INDISCRIMINATE USE OF HYPNOTISM CONDEMNED.

Chicago Medical Man Commented the Action Taken by the Medical Society of Illinois—Dangerous Results Are Feared—They Not Recognized Science in Instances.

All regular practitioners in this city will be interested in the resolve of the Medico-Legal Society at Chicago to stock the pit-mode of hypnotism, hypnotism, or magnetism, by experimental people. The society, which was organized for the purpose of discussing the legal phases of medicine and the necessary legislation for the science, has passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That public sessions of hypnotism, or magnetism, are considered to be improper and tend to the disgrace of other medical men or medicine.

A committee was appointed to present the resolution to the Legislature.

"It positions," said Dr. E. M. Hale, "is a dangerous agent. It is indiscriminate, and its use should certainly be restricted to those who are competent to use it as a medical man are. I have read sufficient to be convinced that the society is the subject under the operator's hands, and, in fact, hypnotism is not an anything suggested—even what is not the experiment of hypnotism for medical purposes should be prohibited. Hypnotism is a dangerous agent, and its use should be restricted only to those

Norwood Notes.

Merry Christmas to you.

Edd Stafford has moved his shoe shop back of his house.

Wally McIntyre is keeping books at Fortuna, Cal.

C. W. Brown is back from Manicelina. He brought his niece with him.

John Trombley left Tuesday for Butte City, Montana. He has two sisters living there.

School is closed for the holidays. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell went home for a week's vacation.

The band boys are talking of getting suits. After the holidays they will have open band room every Saturday evening, want the towns people to turn out and hear some good music once a week.

Will G. Van Pelt arrived Tuesday and will spend the holidays with his parents. Will is a hustling young salesman, and represents Hibbard Spencer & Bartlett, of Chicago, in the hardware line.

Maggi Pearl, last week, bought of the G. R. & I. R. R. 40 acres of cedar timbered land lying near John Ryan's place. He will lumber it this winter for Dan Flanagin.

The Norwood Dramatic Club will during January, put before the public the strong play, "Border Land."

Geo. H. Van Pelt arrived home from St. Paul Friday, and says he is feeling well, tip-top, better than he ever expected to again. Arthur and Jim Chase came with him and are putting in their holidays in glorious style.

S. B. Chase, and Mr. Allis, who has been up with him from Chicago the past week taking measurements preparatory to putting in cold and hot water fittings at Mr. Chase's house in the spring, left for Chicago Sunday by the way of Pinnica.

Quite a good many young people will attend the dances at Charlevoix Christmas eve.

Ben Pearl will be home to spend the holidays.

The Cathead light was blown out for the winter Sunday, Dec. 21st.

Miss Minnie Stafford, of Chicago, come Friday and will spend the holidays with Miss Frost.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, of Traverse City, are here for the holidays, with the Stafford boys.

Don't forget the band boys' dance, at the hall New Years eve.

Haings From Hayes.

It sounds differently to hear the complaints about the lack of snow. There used to be big cuss-words employed when the snow came a little too early, and the chestnuts about the sledding being poor in August, and the traveler going over to East Jordan with Christopher Columbus, in June, on snow-shoes, made us sick. We hope the pessimists won't lay it to the McKinley bill.

Frank Kane was called to Genesee county last week by the illness of Mrs. Kane's mother, Mrs. Wilkes, of Clarkston.

G. W. Ford has purchased a fine span of Clyde colts.

The Maple Grove people will hold their exercises at the school house Christmas night.

Our friend Geo. Saunby, has his great mill in full operation but we do not know what he has christened it. How would «Punkin Hoffer Grist mill" do?

The school children who read the Sentinel will remember that the list of six largest cities in the U. S. were in the following order: New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Baltimore, Cincinnati, San Francisco and New Orleans. The census of 1890 gives the following order: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Boston, Baltimore, San Francisco, Cincinnati and Cleveland. Buffalo comes next, and New Orleans takes twelfth place with Pittsburg close behind, then Washington, Detroit and Milwaukee. These sixteen include the cities having a population of over 200,000.

Cadmus.

Merry Christmas.

Wedding bells on New Years eve.

Mrs. R. Jackson is quite ill.

Miss Annie Bacon was visiting Miss Louisa Willis Saturday and Sunday.

Crane, Whitford & Sons have bought a gang-edger and are putting it in. They have a contract for 1,500,000 feet of maple, elm and basswood logs and are paying $5.50 a thousand.

We are in receipt of a box from Tulapa, on evoking a branch of mistletoe and prickly holly.

Crane & Sons have purchased C. H. Whitford's interest in the mill. This looks as if Mr. Whitford intends to remain south.

The gale from the west last night blew the smoke-stack of Crane, Whitford & Sons mill down and broke it in five pieces.

The compliments of the season to the SENTINEL.

We are wishing and hoping for more snow because of the disappointment of our little ones if Santa Claus can not get here.

Mrs. Lyman, of Charlevoix, is making her home here at present.

Ely Talcuse, of Charlevoix, will spend the winter at H. Graham's.

F. H. Skow and wife and their little daughter christened after the church service last Sunday.

We expect Christmas will be passed quietly in this place as there are no preparations made for any entertainment as yet.

The School Exhibition.

The Charlevoix school exhibition at Lewis Grand Opera House last Friday evening, was the most successful one ever held here. Superintendent Enos presented to the school patrons an entertainment at once pleasing in itself and demonstrating a most satisfactory administration of educational work in Charlevoix. The people of Charlevoix have come to think that Prof. H. M. Enos never fails in anything he undertakes, but the Professor partially shirks the responsibility by saying that the Charlevoix school never fails him in anything when it comes to the test. The crowning feature of the exhibition, unquestionably, was the "Debarte Attitudes." The impression created is that Delsartism can be made more expressive of culture than can the mastering of tones of dead languages, or volumes of belles lettres. The "attitudes" are the embodiment of graceful motion, and the visible expression of every mood or passion that moves the human soul. They were given by ten young ladies of the High School, under the direction of Miss Bailey, the preceptress. Mrs. E. H. Green played the piano accompaniment. This feature of the entertainment was the work of Miss Bailey, and is highly creditable to her. The Opera House was crowded and everybody was pleased.

The D. C. & E. R. R. Mobile.

Thos. Rock, the hibernian hero of the D. C. & E. collapse, is unquestionably master of the situation. On the 18th, in the Emmet county circuit court, the Pine Lake Iron Co. secured a judgment of $1,023.56, and A. Buttars for $21.68, against the company. The purpose was to get a few bids on the road, but the old colt got in three hours ahead and tied his bets.

Matters are so mixed that there is no telling what will come of the legal proceedings. But the hope is that first, those who have their money invested in it will recover; second, that the franchise will fall into the lap of some responsible railroad company and be utilized.

Historical Society.

The Society met in the parlors of Mrs. Nelson Ainslie. The program was as follows: Organ voluntary by Mrs. L. D. Kanagy; paper, "Peru," Miss Maggie Enos; intermission; vocal duett, Misses Clara Ainslie and Bertie Wood; reading on Peru's capital, A. T. Washburn. Adjourned to meet January 9th at Mrs. C. V. Cook's; paper, "Central America," Miss Grace Merrill.

A fine line of modern fancy work, useful and ornamental, in all the perfection of taste and execution, can be found at the emporium of Miss Cochran. MRS. MEADE.

There is not a vacant store room dwelling, or building of any kind in Bellaire. The fact that the C. & W. M. and Ward's railroad will be built there the coming year is interesting the people, and makes them anxious to get in on the "ground floor" and be on tap for the boom that has already begun.

PINE LAKE IRON CO.
Dec. 17, 1890. 23-4w

Pronounced Hopeless Yet Saved.
From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hard, of Goshen, N. D., we quote: «Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally hemorrhages in consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles it has cured me, and thank God I am now a well and nearly woman." Trial bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co's. Regular size, 50 cents and $1.00.

Local News.

To Subscribers.

We have many names on our list, at home and abroad, who are in arrears, from one year up, for the SENTINEL. We shall soon send bills to all such. To save us the trouble and postage, will they kindly hand in or remit the amount at once? Small amounts like these will not hurt the subscriber, but in the aggregate, they amount to a good deal, to us. This is business!

—Now swear off!

—A very happy New Year to all.

—Throw away your pipe Jan. 1, 1891.

—You better quit your meanness Jan. 1, 1891.

—To-morrow is a good time to quit drinking.

—The Cigar Co. are still behind with their orders.

—A Fox has a sad ad in this issue. Read it.

—R. W. Tullock went to Milwaukee yesterday.

—F. E. Wood left Sunday for a trip to southern Michigan.

—H. B. Wood, wife and daughter, arrived here yesterday for a visit.

—Charlie Nettleton has secured a position in a clothing store in Chicago.

—Special meeting of Charlevoix Chapter, O. E. S. Wednesday night Jan. 7th, 1891.

—Mel. Livingstone went to East Jordan yesterday to work in the Enterprise office.

—Mason & Berdan have a New Year ad in their space this week, examining goods.

—Wm. Nelson and wife, and Wm. A. Nelson and wife, of Boyne Falls, spent Christmas with Dr. Lewis.

—L. Whitney, returned from Pennsylvania last week. Mr. Whitney was at Washington during his absence.

—Geo. Bates held the lucky number that drew the sideboard at S. M. See & Sons, and Geo. Birns captured the $35 china set at A. Fox's.

—The last craft to enter Charlevoix harbor was the Willie Rose, Capt. Chas. Rowe, which came in from Harbor Springs yesterday to lay up.

—The Methodist, Congregational, Baptist and Episcopal church people all had Christmas trees, and all gave their Sunday school children a joyful time.

—Grand Rapids Eagle: L. H. Beardslee, for some time past assistant in the Wagner car inspectors office here, has been promoted to the position of Wagner car conductor.

—Albert E. Pessender, of Boyne Weekend county, and Mary A. Cooper of Charlevoix, were married at the home of the bride's parents Christmas. They will reside at Boone.

—At Elmira, N. Y., paper says that Orson Burlingame, a popular Elmiran, and Mrs. Susie Hawkes, of Horseheads, were united in marriage by Rev. M. P. Dewitt, November 27. The bride was formerly a resident of Boyne City.

—Grand Rapids Eagle: General Manager Heald, of the C. & W. M. system has gone to Boston to attend the annual meetings of the boards of directors of the three roads. He is accompanied by his wife, and Tuesday or Wednesday they will go to Baltimore to spend Christmas with relatives there, and will return here about Jan. 1st.

—Old pioneers will not soon forget the shyster lawyer Charles H. Ford, once pioneering attorney, and who subsequently became notorious for his deeds, which gave him a term of imprisonment. It was frequently said that Ford would finally be hanged or sent to state prison for life. The conviction of ex Charlie Ford, of Ottawa, Ill., for murder, and his sentence to be hanged, gives rise to the query as to whether or not it is the notorious Charles H.—Petoskey Democrat. This same Ford many years ago, sued the editor of the SENTINEL for libel, putting his damages at $10,000, and when the day of trial came he was in jail on a charge of robbing the revenue laws.

—Mrs. Hoag, of Petoskey, a sister of Capt. H. G. Edwards, of this place, died at her home last week. She was buried at Manitowoc, Wis.

—The Masonic installation and banquet on the occasion of the festival of St. John the Evangelist, Saturday evening last, was a big success, notwithstanding the severe weather. About 125 people sat down to a banquet at the Fountain City House. The menu was elegant, and all unite in praising brother Cooper on the clay ovens.

—Probably one of the pleasantest Christmas family gatherings in Charlevoix occurred at the residence of E. Carpenter and wife. Their three sons-in-law with their wives and children, and Miss Lillie, made 17 under the paternal roof. A Christmas tree was erected in the parlor and with the beautiful burden of gifts, the wax taper, and the oranges, from the Charlevoix groves in Florida, hanging from the limbs, the sight was a beautiful one.

—Under date of Dec. 22d, L. D. Bartholomew writes from Talispoosa, Ga., as follows: "We have been spending this 'Wonderful Mountain City,' the weather was cold and very changable, and I thought it would have to go further south, but the past few days has been very pleasant and as I am feeling better, I have concluded to stay here a while longer. I cough less and feel stronger than I did, and with a good appetite, ought to gain. The manufacturing establishments here are nearly all idle, which, of course, makes business dull, and they are all waiting, as we are in Charlevoix, for something to turn up to make a boom. The surrounding country is very hilly, with poor soil, so I don't see how the farmers make a living. They don't live; they only stay and eat 'hog and hominy.' I shall stay here a week or ten days longer.

A movement is on foot in Milwaukee and Chicago to have the remains of Andy Johnson replaced by a large and more complete government vessel. The gunboat he sailed, have been taken by prominent gentlemen in the Crescent City and Chicago to the Jackson Avenue Government wharf. The Andy Johnson was constructed in 1865, and cruised in all Lake Michigan's and Lake Superior points, and has at various performed services on Lakes Huron, St. Clair and Erie. The number of miles sailed in making these trips was something over 130,000. The Johnson has in her day seen vessel property on the lakes valued at $1,500,000. While she has been in commission, her officers have rescued some 15,000 vessels, and her crew has saved a number of lives, she is now twenty-five years old and about worn out.

Communication.

To the Issue.

Farmers often imagine themselves imposed upon, and in reality the disconted class impose upon themselves, and bring about a state of affairs that would not exist in this class of disgruntled individuals were at all times honest.

One thing we notice in particular in this county, and that is the inclination among a great many, after they have mortgaged their lands, and find they cannot meet the mortgage, to rent the farm out, and let the mortgage take the load. We can show you over lands that the arties have stripped, not receiving an acre for the use of the farm.

Is that honesty?

These parties voluntarily solicited be loaned on many instances are estimated the value of the land to get to get the loan, and when they fail to meet their obligation begin to depreciate the value of the security by saying—shall we sign it? steeling the timber. We ask the question, who suffers in the long run?

Another thing, we notice that a certain class curse the millers, calling them everything but honest men, when the trouble is, these millers, in many instances, have good long bills, of longer standing, against these parties, and have asked to see the color of their money.

The grain taken to mill and market in this new country, in many instances, is not in milling or marketable condition, and a reasonable man should not expect that a miller will pay the same price for damp, dirty, smutty, shrunken wheat he would pay for a clean, No. 1 article. Our millers have been a blessing to this region, and there are but few thrifty, enterprising farmers who will gainsay it.

We might say a great deal more, but space forbids. We were led into this train of thought by seeing the fanning powers announcing the farmers mill meeting. FARMER.

How an Up-Faker Got Fooled by the Swingbridge.

He was about to years old and faultlessly dressed, but a noticeable unsteadiness in his gate indicated that he had been unduly intimate with the cup which not only cheers but also inebriates. He was making his way north on Bridge Street near the river when he accosted a citizen and asked to be directed to the Fountain City House.

"Keep straight ahead, across the bridge. Then go westward one block."

"On th-thish stree,' an't it?"

"No sir; it's up the hill to the left."

"Th-then I've got t' go West f'r awhile, eh?"

"No sir; not until you go across the bridge."

"I keep right on thish stree' f'r awhile?"

"Yes."

"Go right ahead f'r awhile?"

"Straight ahead across the bridge."

"Right up thish stree? Go th-thish way f'r awhile? Thankah."

Having thus carefully taken his bearings the weary wayfarer continued his northward course. As he laboriously neared the approach leading to the bridge, alarm-bell sounded, signaling a warning that the bridge was about to be swung for the passage of a vessel. The structure was already moving when he stepped unsteadily upon it. While the boat was passing, he stood quietly leaning against the railing of the bridge, and as the latter swung back to its original position he braced up and walked southward, retracing his steps. A moment later he accosted the citizen who had recently sent him on his way rejoicing.

"Shay! Where is Fountain City House?" he asked.

"Across the bridge and to the left."

"Th that way? Right up that way?" (pointing northward.)

"Yes sir."

"Not down that way, eh?" (pointing southward.)

"No."

For a moment he seemed to be buried in thought. Then he braced himself as I was a grandiloquent air said:

"My frien' I b'lieve you're a liar."

From Clarion.

Mr. Chas. J. Miner has gone to spend the winter with her many friends in New York state.

Married, at Harbor Springs, Dec. 17, Mr. A. D. Loomis, of Carlton, to Miss Mary Headmond, of Levering.

Mr. Cox has a large singing class here.

Mr. C. J. Miner is away visiting a few days.

There is talk of a grist mill at Horton's Bay. Welcome.

Miss Rena Pritchard is spending the holidays at Reed City with her old friends and acquaintances.

A very pleasant time at the Christmas tree at the M. E. church and at the anniversary Christmas night at the U. B church.

Dr. Kerns and family have moved to Boyne City ready to take his place as soon as he leaves. Many friends will not only miss him as a citizen but it leaves Clarion without a physician. May he prosper, are our wishes.

Mr. A. G. Wiggins is appointed township clerk in place of Dr. Kerns.

Miss Franklin Wiggins has returned from her school to spend the winter here. Her many friends honored her with a surprise at Rev. J. G. Holliday's.

AT CHRISTMAS-TIDE.

At Christmas-tide come thou! the earth
A sightly pulse of love,
A pulse that half its primal thirst
In heavenly balm above.

At Christmas-tide a tender thought
Checks through the cent of time,
The cold, dull pulse of earth, and brings
Its life to mind sublime.

At Christmas-tide all sufferings
Be dead—dented for Those who have loved and lost—those Who have pain on earth.

At Christmas-tide with grateful voice
We turn to bless Thee,
And we thank Thee for the wondrous
Be content of our offices.

At Christmas-tide the poor shall lift
Glad chants and rejoicings
Of joy, and the rich shall gift
A world redemption sings.

THE PRIZE RAISIN.

A Christmas Story of the Seventeenth Century.

BY ANNIE CAIN SAXON.

RAISIN never deep heart, Mistress Margery, and thank God I made for indulging him long hours down to one year. Ever since Dame Cromwell, her husband's cousin, the expanding little fellow has been as quiet as smile, as she dreamt forth in a season from the great Tower. "Pray heavy on humble thanks! Pray for the poor souls!" Margery sang, for kindly would we pour Lettie fair Hall into a prayer-book, saying in low whisper, "Hist, Margery! For 'tis Margery I dance! Dear little soul is me, little mine!"

"It is good, it must to Hall!" gasped the girl, as soon as the friend voice to speak. "Hist, lady—hist! Here you frightened me, and who dispel come here this morning, and who dispel come here dress?" and the little body danced with new pain and leaden pinkie.

"Come, my lady, 'twill be not be amen in velvet and lace ruffles, but sweetheart, to this all the welcome you have—your mother's gown! Just enough to stay playfulness? Can it be they have turned even yet against poor Lettie?"

"Nay, lay—hist! subject Margery, where affection and sorrow sing hand in glue for the memory. "I am glad, truly glad to see thee! Thinking my best prayer around her cousin's nest, she danced in right merry! 'Sha' where sang the poor real at thee morning!"

"In Holland, sweetheart. There we had knocks at the door of Sedgemoor, and the sweet Lady Lettie, and I, stood under the shadow of Derby House, where I lay for three months suffering from a wound in my leg. Only now have I ventured back to England, drawn by the longing I felt to see you all. But hist! we must not let Father see. They are well, I trust?"

"Ah, but Sir Humphrey he forbidden that your name be spoken in the house under pain of his severest displeasure, and would have was tempt from the gates should you appear. Hist, lady dear, Hist, how could you so malicious his wishes and silk, with glad thoughts?"

"Hesaiah, Farnsch, I never believed he so cruel! Why, I have been thinking long Jasper, our would love, Margery, good lad! Margery, Margery, you'd jog hates sons also and heard his voice. Never was there so fair spaniel a day, or one better fitted to lead men to the mass! You know the Taunton nadies who all carried away by his comely countenance?"

"Ah, alack! and suffered sorely for their pains, poor souls! but happy you, lady, I ha' to hear conscientious gear your ha'."

"Yes, I see now that it was all a grievous mistake, but surely, my sweetheart, we were unfaithful, true, treasured religion, to fighting for Monmouth and now I come all this way to confess my error and beg my father's pardon."

"He will never grant it—will never even see you."

"What! Not if thou send my cause, Hesaiah? Why, what sin can be so great? Lettie and weasel! time to repent, and Hall, you shall not regret it."

"I would indeed I could help you!" cried Margery. "But I see our poor Sir Humphrey always overcomes his will with his wrath, and I know he would rather lose his fortune than a single jot of his opinions."

"Tonque, faint heart! Be brave for sake," urged that. "Gain me but an audience and then—and then—and then!"

The girl shook her head dolefully, for, as the pleading eyes looked imploringly into hers, "I will—hey!" at length dropped slowly from her lips.

"That's my own, true little kinsmen! Hist, quick, meanwhile you must start home at! Tower! Tower! Hist! I will—I will meet you at the side-door of the Hall! Just where you used to meet Lettie Hall! Hist! Hesaiah! Hesaiah! Hesaiah Japan, profiting by the awful example of Cleveland, will forego pentagonal century formatives. He is capable of something more substantial.

Wait until the Minerals are ripe and the Indians have to dance to keep warm, and then it will be too much like work for the noble savages. Fire and fine water will suit him better.

The President has appointed Judge Henry B. Brown, of Michigan, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Miller. His name has been sent to the Senate. The nomination of Judge Brown is a great honor to Michigan.

Mayor Ottt, of Grand Rapids, has such a good time receiving the school children on a visit to his city that he forgot to attend the council meeting, and when they sent for him he said, "I'm a lunatic." His minute was a long one, and he had to pay for a box of cigars, as is provided in the ordinance, for tardiness.

The Democratic party when in power has been well described by a close observer as "organized apathy." This description is being well illustrated in the present scramble for positions under the incoming administration. Every department is overwhelmed with applications. Many are doomed to disappointment, all cannot secure appointments. Some hungry cases will be left out in the cold and there is where the howl will come in.

In railroad circles there is considerable talk of the G. H. & I. running into Chicago during the coming year. President Hughart has been fighting on the scheme for some time and it is now believed that a feasible and practical route has been found whereby this road will build on an old route to St. Joe, and then out south until the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & Chicago road is reached, when it will be an easy matter to run in on their rails.

The Grand Army of the Republic is a unique organization. In the words of the last commander-in-chief: "No child can be born into it, no promotion of President, editor or King, or same of Czar can command membership; no university or institution of learning can issue a diploma authorizing the holder to entrance; no act of congress or parliament secures recognition; the wealth of a Vanderbilt cannot purchase the position; its doors swing open only upon presentation of the bit of paper-tore, worn, stained it may be, which certifies to an honorable discharge from the armies or navies of the nation during the war of the rebellion." And unlike any other association, no "new blood" can come in, there are no growing ranks in which recruits can be drawn into the Grand Army of the Republic. With the consummation of years through Victory, its rolls were closed forever. Its lines are steadily and swiftly growing thinner and the ceaseless tramp of its columns is with ever-lessening tread; the gaps in the picket line grow wider; day by day details are made from the reserve, summoned into the shadowed regions to return to touch elbows no more, until in and by-and-by, solitary sentinel shall stand, waiting till the bugle call from beyond shall muster on the last comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic.

President Harrison's administration has done much to strengthen the party since the elections. During the next eighteen months it will have an unrivaled opportunity for impressing the country with the superiority of the Republican methods of administration. Its conduct of foreign affairs has been vigorous, conservative and enlightened. American diplomacy having explained to the incoming administration. Every department is overwhelmed with applications. Many are doomed to disappointment, all cannot secure appointments. Some hungry cases will be left out in the cold and there is where the howl will come in.

Petoskey Record: A man living a few miles west has a little black bull which he drives in the shafts to a buggy. The bull is a trotter; and while he wouldn't stand much of a show with Nelson or Maud on the track, when he takes a common dirt road for it, his steady trot gets there all the same. It is quite a curiosity to see him snake that buggy down Mitchell street, when his owner starts into after competing his purchases.

They must sell tremendously deep whiskey in Boyne City, or else a fearful "what-is-it" haunts the Boyne valley between Boyne Falls and Boyne City. Here is the Boyne Falls News' account of the last scare: "Disgust or animal or whatever it is that haunts the locality north of Boyne City road between Boyne Falls and Boyne City, was heard again last night. Mr. Frank Bissell, who was coming to town on his pony, was chased quite a piece by the critter, which sounded like a bull bellowing and crashing through the brush. Mr. Bissell reached in a good year Kentucky, and the tugs while working to get her off pulled her stern to pieces and she was abandoned. She was noted for sailing up more sea-sickness to the square rod than any other craft on the lakes."

Big Rapids Progress: It is reported that fifty men are at work on a railroad from Kalkaska to Elk Rapids. Fifty men can get her through in about that number of years. So we live in hopes.

Capt. Walter E. Cryster and Miss Helen Vanderhoef were married at seven o'clock Christmas morning, at the home of the bride in Petoskey, by Rev. C. T. Stuntz, rector of the Petoskey Episcopal church.

Since the railroads penetrated Benzie Co. the giant forests are being changed into farms, and everything begins to look up. During the past the county has been slent out as it were, from the outside world, the only means of reaching it was by the lake or by stage.

Fifteen persons have been drowned in Little Traverse bay since 1858. Of this number the bodies of two or three have been recovered, and these by mere chance. It is believed that there is an undercurrent which sweeps in around the southeast shore of the bay, carrying all bodies out to the open lake.

The quickest way to make a Chebeygan man mad is to insinuate his town is yet considerably in the woods and that lumbering is the principal business. Every department is overwhelmed with applications. Many are doomed to disappointment, all cannot secure appointments. Some hungry cases will be left out in the cold and there is where the howl will come in.

The 41,000,000 gallons of spirit made in the United Kingdom in 1889 were mostly used in England, and nearly three-fourths of this was drunk as a beverage.

The Independent was the first steamboat to navigate the Missouri River. She left St. Louis May 16, 1819, and stopped near Omaha, where a great banquet was tendered.

The death rate in Austria in 1889 was lower than it has been for ten years. The total number of deaths was 646,782, being at the rate of 27.25 per million inhabitants. The number of births was 1,036,336, or 8,449 fewer than in 1888. Among the children born there were 1,004 boys to 1,000 girls.

Mackinaw Island, Mich., has some queer people. Lewis Pendre is eighty-six years old, was born on the island and has never seen a locomotive or railroad car. Rose Lamelpassé is also eighty-six years old and for sixty years never left the island, breaking her record last year.

An Idaho bank on which there was a run piled upon the counter what was supposed to be $40,000 in gold. This dropped the run and brought in deposits, and when the trouble was over the gold was taken down. The packages contained iron washers cut to the thickness and size of $20 gold pieces.

The fastest bird on the wing is the swift, which has been known to attain a speed of 200 miles an hour. It feeds exclusively on flies, which it captures while flying. The speed of the swallow, which comes next, is that of the swift, is usually fifty miles an hour, but sometimes goes as high as ninety miles.

More than five thousand circumcisions in Berlin are without work or money. The builders say that the stoppage of their trade, from which this state of affairs has resulted, is due to the recently increased agitation of the social democracy. Every one is afraid to construct new buildings for fear of a strike for higher wages on the part of the workmen, who remain as the work is easier way.

A Joliet, Mich., man took home two bottles of beer, "and instead of drinking the stuff put the bottles down on the woodpile. By man," sort of forgot to open one of the bottles." In the night the cold got into the bottle and burst it, wrecked the stove and scared the wife out of a year's growth. The man properly drank the contents of the other bottle and went out to buy a new stove.

All watches are said to be temperous, and the matter is explained in this way: Point the hour hand to the sun and the moon is exactly half way between the hour and the figure XII on the watch. For instance, suppose it is 4 o'clock. Point the hour hand pointing 4 to the sun and it on the watch is exactly much. Suppose it is 8 o'clock, point the hour hand pointing 8 to the sun, and the figure X on the watch is due south. This is a very useful thing for woodmen and hunters to remember.

Kruppa, the maker of great guns, has just given to the emperor and the crown prince a cannon each. The emperor's present is exclusively decorated with military designs, and is mounted on a Kruppa to be fire itself on workmanship ever turned out from his foundry. Although supposed to be but a miniature coast gun, it weighs 4,000 pounds. The crown prince, the emperor has said, will be taught to load and fire his new cannon within two or three years.

Robert Louis Stevenson cannot make up his mind to go home to Scotland to settle his affairs and get his books. He seems determined to stay in Samoa until time for that hearty and healthy epitaph he has written for himself:

"Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad I lived and glad I died,
And I laid me down with a will.
This be the verse you grave for me:
Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."

A CALL FOR WIVES.

A Consignment of Girls to Be Sent to Canadian Bachelors.

A cry for wives comes from pathetic appeal that comes from the Provinces to Quebec from the Canadian settlers in the Canadian Northwest Territories.

A prominent Roman Catholic clergyman in Calgary is now imparting, during his stay in Montreal, a lot here being suggested to him by his discouraging experience of his parish, and which consists in supplying them with wives. Many of the settlers, with the exception of squatters, are settlers in the Canadian Territories, and there is an almost total absence of young marriageable females, and the consequent result is that the struggling settlers who have gone out there from Ontario, Provinces of Quebec. Their priests are extremely anxious to see them married, for fear of their own nationality and faith, so as to encourage the growth in the new N.-W. territory of a French-speaking and Roman Catholic population.

Judging by the wonderful natural resources of the Canadian Northwest, the province of Quebec, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Government of the Dominion, the supplying of wives and mothers to people who are willing to all that is necessary to the comfort and happiness of an organized population. Nation on the Western Prairies, the Government of Quebec, the French-Canadian formerly established the Ladies' Emigration Society, which has been already filled with the Provinces of Quebec for the grants of 100 acres of land and a bonus of $100 to every settler who shall have married the requisite number of families of French-Canadian ancestry. Quebec is the province of French-Canadian ancestry, and the Government is willing to do so, as the priests are anxious to see their people settled in the Northwest Territories, and the Government

FOR THE ELECTION BILL

Senator Cullom Makes an Argument in Its Behalf.

In the Senate, the question bill was taken up again on the 16th, and Mr. Coke spoke in opposition to it. Mr. Cullom (Republican) argued that the bill as the law that could be framed to meet the evils complained of, with the understanding that he should factor such amendments as might be offered, and eight weeks his opportunity. The bill, he said, was not a partisan measure, nor was it of the character, details or its form and the Democrats, on the ground that the General Government was as much and as the Constitution, to control and manage the election of its own officers as it was to the States. But he that admission there was a wide difference between the proposition to tax the United States money to regulate the war—to protect the agents of the South in Kentucky and Tennessee—and to secure a fair count in the right to exercise, without fear or molestation, the franchise bestowed by the laws of our land. He spoke of the outrages in Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Georgia, and South Carolina, and Mr. Cullom declared, when the authority of the Government ceased to be felt, and half of the reserved of the South, to the covering power, the Government was powerless to Secure Life protecting the citizen in the exercise of the rights conferred by the laws of the United States and the public. The Bill was passed. Mr. Ingalls of New Mexico, from the Committee on Mississippi Matters and Elections, reported the Senate resolution to the effect that the Mississippi contest was entitled to be heard on the merits, and that the Senate has authority to deal with that of other states, even the House of Representatives. Mr. Pendleton made a motion that the House be informed that the Senate is ready to proceed with the business of the session, and to place the Mississippi contest aside for a time, and deal with the other business.

THE DAKOTA LIQUOR LAW.

The Supreme Court Holds it as Original Package Law.

In the celebrated liquor prohibition case of the State of South Dakota vs. George H. Thomas and William Scott, (on a writ of error The Supreme Court has rendered a decision in favor of the defendants. This was an action, criminal, the defendants being indicted, in Hughes County, for the District court of Lincoln County for selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage and unlawfully and unlawfully possessing the same to remain in rooms and buildings where such liquors were sold. A jury was impanelled, a trial had, and a verdict of guilty rendered against the defendant Scott, who was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and to stand committed for thirty days. The court further holds that where liquor is imported into a state in each original package, and in a paper wrapper and closed and stored together in uncovered wooden boxes, marked by the importer, and these wooden boxes are emptied in the dwelling of the agent and shipped from one State to another, the wooden boxes and not the bottles constitute the original package within the meaning of the decisions of the Supreme Court. The court find that the defendants had lawfully sold the liquors will entitle them to any immunity from the penalties of the law, and reverses that the judgment of the court be unfavorable.

BANKERS UNDER ARREST.

Consequence of the Failure of S. A. Kean & Co. at Chicago.

S. A. Kean & Co., of Chicago, one of the best known bankers in the Northwest, has failed, and Samuel S. Kean, head of the house, and George H. Weeks, the cashier, are under arrest charged with receiving deposits in the firm's name before the failure, and when they knew the bank was insolvent. The bank is a private charge, and, if proved, constitutes the crime of embezzlement. The schedule of assets as estimated by the assignee foots up a total of $937,000. The liabilities are figured at $1,300,000.

Marrying for Self-Protection.

THE H. C. Prick Coke Company of Scottdale, Pa., has notified its employes in large number of its patentees employes at Standard and Mount Pleasant and has had 150 employes. A special ruling was made to give work to married men during the winter, but it was found that a vice to the single men of the district had sprung up, and married men, to secure work, married young girls, who could be married by New Years. Indeed, it was the desire of the target of the contract, and the knowledge of the action has caused a great deal of talk among the young women of the entire region.

Cut at a Chinaman.

Twenty or Thirty men who were captured near Bonneville, Wash., while attempting to smuggle their way into the United States, have been taken to Port Townsend. The party crossed across and the Chinamen was found by Inspector Dyke, who ordered them back. They will call the attention of their Government to the filling The Inspector made against officers held him blameless.

It Was Only a Social Game.

Gov. Taylor, of Tennessee, has undertaken severe criticism when some one evidently and sentenced to thirty days in jail for gambling in addition to a fine of one cents of the Christian Church at Memphis. Several ministerial brethren are now among the prisoners of executive clemency and escaped punishment on the ground that they were not gambling, and that they were only engaged in a social game.

EASTERN OCCURRENCES.

MAJOR GEN. ALFRED HOWE TYLER died on Tuesday morning last, from the effects of his residence, No. 30 Hillhouse Ave., New Haven, Conn. His death had been expected, but not so suddenly as it came. It was the 50th anniversary of his marriage with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Deceased was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1815, and was a graduate of the Yale class of 1837. He was a lawyer by profession and a member of the Connecticut Legislature. He was a Democrat in politics and was a member of the Hartford Convention. He was a member of the Hartford Convention. DUEL BETWEEN ELEPHANTS.

Terrific Battle of Leviathans Which Is Thought to be Death.

It was my good fortune writes a correspondent to a Kendall paper, for some years to spend some months every season in a free forest and sill country where my duties gave me chances of seeing a great deal of elephant, bison, and other big game that frequented those parts. One morning on a partially isolated hill, a good deal above the surrounding country, we had been some days in camp, but had not been visited as usual by our friends, the elephants, when one afternoon the sudden bellow of one, evidently in pain, roused every one in the camp. A bill man presently came up to say that two large tuskers were hard on it close by. Every one turned out on to the hillside, from where it was easy, even with the naked eye, to see what was going on, while with a glass even the movements of a startled deer could be made out.

About 200 or 300 yards below the crowd watching the fight were two tuskers. The one somewhat nearer us, a burly, stout-built beast with short, powerful tusks, was evidently getting much the worst of the contest, and the white and red furrows on his sides and rear plainly indicated scores run in his antagonist's tusks. Blood could be seen trickling down his head and shoulders. On the top of the hill was the rival, a still larger animal, possessing the advantage of longer, gleaming tusks. It was a long fight, and in a few minutes the victor, with a quick rush at the other, made a good thrust at the side, and, though there was a severe struggle, the tusk went its full length in the now beaten brute, and using all his weight, the victor pressed him down the hill where they disengaged themselves and prepared for another bout.

The wounded tusker's roars of pain and rage were painful to hear, and though he would have escaped if he could, the other kept close behind and administered thrust after thrust, but not in any vital part. Presently wheeling around, they came together with a mighty smash. This was about the only stand made, and the weaker was quickly overpowered by the more powerful and fresher victor. The thrusts now put behind the shoulder and into the body quickly dissolved the poor beast, and in fact in a few minutes the combat was finally over; the conqueror with one run completely routing his enemy over, and by repeated thrusts into the prostrate form finishing the fight amidst moanings and trumpeting.

Next morning, on our proceedings to look for the tuskers, we found a large herd in an excited state, almost on the spot where the combat had occurred. As it were several small tuskers, besides the big conqueror of the evening before, who seemed to instill a good deal of fear into the youngsters. We could now see the cause of such a fine young tusker, and as he approached even the other cows threw was a general stampede out of his way.

We came on the dead beast, which had been buried and rolled, after it was killed, into a clump of bamboos. It had been a fine, lusty animal, but was marked from forehead to rump and top to tow by rips and cuts. He measured nine feet six inches at the shoulder, and the tusks, which were taken by the hill men, proved slightly over the pounds the pair. The color, which in the fight appeared to tower over his foe, must have been quite ten feet high, and had the longest tusks I have ever seen clear of their sockets. I tried to get him, but what with his haven about him and the difficulty of getting a clear view in the long grass I failed to get a shot.—Gallipolis Messenger.

The Prodigal Son.

The teacher of a Sunday school class of colored children expounded to them the parable of the prodigal son. She described in as graphic a manner as she could the young man eating husks while the swine fed on the corn. In the middle of her description one ebony boy held up his hand and said: "Missus, I think that white boy was a fool." "Why do you think so?" "Cause if I had been him I would 'a stole one of dem hogs an' had a good dinner.—Christian Advocate.

The Eiffel Tower.

The stockholders in the Eiffel tower enterprise are feeling blue just now in consequence of the steady diminution of their receipts. In the season now closing 675,000 francs were taken in. The cost of keeping the tower open was 350,000 francs, and 300,000 more were spent for repairs. Next season the small profit of this year will be wiped out, it is expected, and a considerable deficit will appear in the place of it. In view of this probability 168,000 francs were reserved for future use from the profits of the exhibition year.

—The two-cent fare bill has been declared constitutional, and by the provisions all railroads whose gross passenger earnings are $1,000 per mile are limited to 2 cents fare; those earning between $2,000 and $3,000 to 2½ cents and all others are allowed the customary three cents.

—It is a pretty hard matter for us to decide, whether Gen. W. Miller is showing sparrows for his pet cat, or the two cents a head bounty provided by law. Frank Sears informed our reporter emphatically that it was the purpose of Mr. Miller to get enough sparrow heads to secure his tax receipt.

—Bishop Gillespie, of Grand Rapids, was stayed with a severe attack of nose bleed while at the Alle during the watch night services and had to be conducted home before the flow of blood could be stopped. The sight of blood in the church was alarming, but was easily quieted on the assurance of a doctor that it was nothing dangerous.

—A musical event embracing more singers, and involving more land labor than any previous one in this section of Northern Michigan, will be the oratorio of "Esther," at Lewis Grand Opera House on Jan. 23 and 24. Elaborate costumes from Detroit have been engaged, and the music has been carefully drilled. As before stated, two of the leading singers of Elk Rapids will take leading parts—the King and Hasman. It is a most expensive production, and this helped the Opera House will be crowded both nights.

—E. W. Miller, recently elected Commander Commander of the Knights of Pythias, declined the office, and S. H. Cutkin was elected and installed in that office.

—The costumes for the oratorio of "Queen Esther" are all new and from the leading costumer of Detroit. It costs big money to get them, but no money or labor will be spared to make the event a success.

—S. Cohen returned home last week from Frankfort, where he had up the tug Ausquith temporarily. He will return to Frankfort about Feb. 1st, and open up winter fishing, continuing until the ice goes out here.

—Chas. P. Dixon has sold the first Jordan Bidcyprie, but the purchaser is not yet known. Will N. Moore's name appears as editor. Mr. Dixon will this week return with his two sons to England to remain. The sixteen miles brother Dixon will.

—Geo. Ward, a resident of Cheboygan, died last Thursday, of diabetes, from which he has long been a sufferer. Mr. Ward was an employe of the old factory, but of late has been a druggist. The funeral was held at the home Saturday, Rev. Mr. Reed officiating.

—The annual meeting of the Michigan Masonic home association was held in Grand Rapids one day last week. Secretary Innes reports expenditures to date of $60,880, the building completed ready for furniture and 2,000 members on the roll. Treas Barth reports $24,000 on hand and all debts paid. The home will be dedicated January 27 by the grand lodge, and the grand lodge will be asked to assume management of the institution.

Wachtel Elected Speaker.

The House of Representatives at Lansing yesterday elected Phillip H. Wachtel, of Petoskey, speaker.

It is refreshing to note that the Democratic House have made so good a start in their proceedings. Wachtel is a good man, has ability, and will reflect credit on Northern Michigan.

We congratulate our young Democratic friend, and, during the brief period that the Democratic party will have power in Michigan, wish him continued political prosperity.

The Indian War.

Too late for the SENTINEL last Wednesday came the news that in an ambush in Indian land at Wounded Knee, the savages broke out, and with weapons previously concealed, killed a Captain, and killed and wounded fifty soldiers.

As we write, the war is on, and the Indians are surrounded by about 9,000 troops, including cavalry, infantry and artillery. Fighting is in progress, which must, as it looks now, result in the extermination of the hostiles.

Gen. Miles, the great Indian fighter, is in the saddle, and in direct command of the movements.

—S. H. Bearnisse and family are back from Grand Rapids.

—Advices from the board of supervisors to-day state that aside from appointing bonds and auditing claims, nothing of importance has been done.

—Charlevoix Democrat: The museum installation and banquet Saturday evening was a big event and notwithstanding the stormy night nearly 200 people sat down at the Excelsior City House to a menu that could not be surpassed in a town with a dozen railroads. The installation ceremonies passed off very nicely, and immediately after dinner H. W. Mifflin rose and in appropriate words presented to the retiring Master, W. A. Smith, a full Master's jewel and apron, as a testimonial from his brother masons. The solid gold jewel is of exquisite workmanship and design, and bears the name and lodge of the recipient. While the apron is hand-omely embroidered in silver, and is as fine as could be secured. Mr. Smith was first elected Master fourteen years ago, and has been at the head of the lodge eleven years of the time since first filling the seat. It is needless to say he prizes the jewel and apron very highly, and they are tokens which any man would be grateful to receive and proud to wear.

—Hugo Zelm, of St. Ignace, recently trapped a silver-gray fox. This is the most valuable pelt in the world, and will bring him $100.

The deacons to the saints' church, at Bellaire, who threw a backslider out of doors for refusing to sing, speak or pray at a prayer meeting, and refused him hard upon the ground in front of the church, have been found guilty of assault and battery and assessed $10 each by justice Kilby. The trial was held in the court room and for three days the place was packed with members of this church, who drove from miles around to help pray their church into the hole it had fallen in. The sisters were given seats upon the platform and worked away upon their knitting and sewing when the trial lagged. Their babies were also present and joined in the chorus when some rousing salvation song was sung in the midst of the court proceedings. The three deacons fined will appeal the case to the circuit court.

—I purpose to give an entertainment at Lewis Grand Opera House, Jan. 19th. A solo contest of young ladies for a prize, together with a varied program, consisting of charming little folks Pantomimes and scenes, duetts, trios, etc., the rare privilege of listening to this cultured vocalist, Mrs. King. Our pronounciatory has naturally led to an interest in Charlevoix young ladies and our motive is to raise the standard of music.

THE SKELETON.

BY ANTONY GRAY.

Red gilded walls and stately halls
I pass the lime away;
I have great wealth, enjoy good health,
And many servants pay.
I have a wife to share my life,
Whom servants wait upon;
Soft by my side does Love abide
As steady as the sun.

My wife's fair face doth match the grace
And beauty of her form;
With pleasant smiles, through many miles
Of joy we journey on.
Each week-end stroke a new lovelier broke,
Each year more friends have won.
And each success hath come to bless
Me and my skeleton.

Sometimes I cry to God, thus cry
And drive into Heed from me:
He sent pleasure, but sorrow also
And bangle unstingly.
Oh, aching heart! Oh, pain! Oh, smart!
To bear till life is done!
Will it be true, when life is through,
Pain comes with death's sun?
The year goes by, and gone and sigh
And with the bright delirium
Tell me! Thank God you have to plod,
Nor wish for gone as strange.
Once thou fled be who lived to see
A twelve month hence this year
Who hath not sighed, looked back, and cried
To Hide a skeleton.

These words hath pain pursued in my brain
"Hold on! Hold fast! Hold on!
I'll struggle on till life is gone,
Then I can rest! Then I can rest!
Oh, God! Abide close by my side,
As then hast ever done,
Through evils, pain, I'll hold on hard! gold dross
I doubt! who a skeleton Leaves.

A Remarkable Romance.

CHAPTER XI.

"A MYSTERIOUS ARRIVAL.

"Has she come?" asked Sir Reginald Crecknell of Lady Constance, as he distinctly heard a carriage stop before the door, and his own coachman's voice speak up to the horses.

"She has, without a doubt, brought thirty to your presence?"

"Yes, and one to tell that no man enters this room until they are summoned, as I wish to see Miss Ethel alone. Let them always been exclusively a court chamber, and so richly was it furnished that she gazed at once why Lady Constance had ordered it to be made ready.

As soon as the maid had withdrawn, Ethel commenced an examination of the appointments Sir Reginald had mentioned. The bedcurtains were of the rich silk, which had been carried thither from the Indian Ocean, and the bed was of ebony. The drawer in a table, and given her a lock of a servant who was in the secret of the Hall, and who was well versed in the books, and remembering his directions, she opened the drawer, and found nothing lacking her door.

Very beautiful looked the young girl as she stood by the side of the bed, her heavy crape veil thrown back, revealing her rich, round face and large, yellow eyes.

"Why, sir," said she, after an pause, "half-hearkly greeting, "I grieve to see you so helpless! Have you not been in lodgers?"

"Yes; this morning I was thrown from my horse, and, as he is here helpless for months, I must be a cripple then, in answer to a letter received a few moments before the accident from my sister, written before her death. In that she asks me to give you a home for the remainder of my life, in return for any service I may wish rendered. I need, because I need assistance immediately of a very peculiar nature, are you willing to undertake it, at a fair salary?"

"Probably I can tell better when I hear what the duties will be."

"Exactly! I can tell better when I hear what the duties will be."

"Is it that you wish me to stand on the small Bible you see upon yonder table?"

Sitting Bull's grave has to be guarded by soldiers to fend off the Sioux mourn fiends who want his skeleton. This is what it is to be a truly great man.

A Chicago doctor claims to have made the discovery that it is possible to repair a man's brains by removing a portion thereof, and replacing the part removed with the brains of one of the lower animals. This chicanery will be a godsend to some of our newly-elected Democratic congressmen and state legislators.

The manufacture of tin plate in Chicago is an excellent commentary on the McKinley bill. It certainly ought to convince any and every man that possesses a grain of sense that it will be but a short time when every particle of tin plate that is used in this country can and will be manufactured on American soil. Let the McKinley bill be given a fair trial.

Prof. Orton, state geologist of Ohio, in his annual report for 1888, sounds the death knell of natural gas. After sounding its big arguments the Toledo Blade concludes "so far as the gas area now known is concerned, it is but a matter of a year or two at the utmost, until those cities which now depend upon pipe lines, will have to return to coal. That is the conclusion of the whole matter."

Frank Moore, the compiler of "The Rebellion Record," has discovered what he believes to be a genuine portrait of George Washington engaged in smoking a pipe. It is by a southern artist, and is the property of an old Virginia family. Mr. Moore intends to reproduce it for printing, and says that it will add more to the least from the generally prevailing idea of the great personal dignity of Washington.

The Indian troubles have now got beyond the newspaper correspondence stage, and actual war has begun. The Indians are well armed, well trained, cunning and brave. They outnumber the troops about ten to one, especially in the vicinity of the Pine Ridge Agency, where 5,000 Indians are massed. At Cheyenne, Miles directs the affairs of this Indian war in a successful manner, he will be a hero and entitled to substantial honors.

Esteemed Democratic contemporaries who are advocating the re-nomination of Grover Cleveland for President, although he was beaten two years ago, assure their readers to stop and think a little by their declarations that because Mr. Parnell has been beaten in North Kill may be in politically dead. Parnell has been rejected in part of one county Ireland, while Cleveland has been rejected in the whole nation. If the record of defeat be dismissive to a leader, the Democratic party is wrecked when did whose own State has repudiated him.

And now a wealthy firm to buy the entire product of Alaska, offering therefor a lump sum of $11,000,000. This is just double the amount the government paid for it. Let hyperbolic government jolly for Democratic newspaper in the vicinity of the Pine Ridge Agency, where 5,000 Indians are massed, if they please. Miles directs the affairs of this Indian war in a successful manner, he will be a hero and entitled to substantial honors.

CAUGHT HIM IN THE ACT.

Husband Shot Down a Would-be Paramour Thief.

A novel attempt was made Christmas Eve to rob the jewelry store of Nowlin, Albany & Co., No. 115 State street, Chicago. During the afternoon a private detective employed in the firm noticed a man seriously making his way through the different departments. At the dinner counter he lingered for some time, examining goodness knows what every counter, and showing a thorough knowledge of pens and their prices. And when the clerk, in bring from the vault the most valuable cases kept in stock, Nowlin, Alsber & Co. kept open only a few hours on Christmas Eve to connoisseurs, the detective noticed a fellow peeping. When the store was closed and the clerks were busied the detective spied another fellow of the same stripe. He was trying through the establishment and gradually edging his way to the diamond counter. The officer spoke to the 1st fellow and he vanished, leaving the stranger's side when he noticed the officer. He gave the signal to negotiate with the clerk. And such the entire lighting was. The clerks in the store was plunged into total darkness. The detective felt that he was grappled with the stranger, and, as he struggled, he heard the sound of a pistol shot. Then the gas was turned on and lighted in a thousand jets, and the officer was guard over the intruder. Investigation showed that one of the clerks in the electric light had been cut from the outside to an unknown point. The short space of time left at his disposal, further the officer found that the 1st of the counter had been lost, and had already passed great value in jewelry and costly articles.

BIG COLONIZATION SCHEME.

A Company Formed to Develop the Resources of Brazil.

The Bureau of American Republics in Washington has received information of the organization of a company of capitalists in Brazil, South America, under the Chapman Law, for the purpose of colonizing 500,000 square miles of Brazil. The company is a large portion of which is now in the hands of the Brazilian government, and is to be used for colonization purposes. The object of the organization is to colonize the twenty agricultural settlements upon the public lands in Brazil, which are given free of cost by the Government. Railway lines will be constructed to connect these settlements to communication with each other and to the seaport cities. The capital will also carry on mining operations and be engaged in the manufacture of tiles, lime and other articles for export as well as for home use.

The company proposes to select a certain number of immigrants, mechanics, skilled farmers and merchants, and transport them free of cost to Brazil, where houses will be prepared for their occupancy and land granted to them free of charge. These colonists will be given a certain number of years of over the estate as the success for other colonists, and the land of the three lots. The Federal and several State Governments of Brazil have offered a guaranty of 6 per cent interest on outlays of the company in these enterprises.

"Cleaning Out the Bedroom" Parlor.

The Philadelphia journal of Mr. Frank A. Abbott, President of the Society, has a letter from Gen. Henry Gillig for the benefit of the Society, which has been published. The essential point is this: Accumulation of rubbish, and the disinclination to do the only thing to do with it, namely, to burn it, is the great hindrance to improvement in the public health and comfort. The effort to clean out the bedroom, and the determination to do the only thing to do with the rubbish from the parlor, would be the most effective means of improvement in the public health and comfort. The Philadelphia Society will shortly publish a pamphlet on the subject, which will include also a discussion of the danger of the accumulation of rubbish in the bedrooms, and the determination to do the only thing to do with it, namely, to burn it.

Will Keep the Place Up.

A meeting of the manufacturers and jobbers of the Pittsburg district was held in Pittsburg on the 2nd inst. Mr. Harbourne, President, was called to order and gave notice to put out, but when the Wednesday, Thursday and Friday were stated for 25 per cent, advance. The avowed intention of the Federation is to keep prices up to the present

IT'S A NEGRO PROPHET.

And Georgia People Think His Quaint Observations Contain All Wisdom.

Smithville, Lee County, Ga., boasts a colored philosopher named John Sparkins, who he bounds in his acquaintance to the limiting bits of Lucifer. He makes a great many startling and unanswerable observations some of which have been thought worthy of a place in print. Here are a few of his quaint assertions from the Louisville Times:

I dunno know of dis world is a fine'n to grow on my hat. I kyan mine folks dat don't stay grace at all.

De apple in you mine makes lay while de sun shines, an dat's why dere's such a scarcity of lay. Folks don't like de sun, you see.

Religion is a great blessin', but sum folks tuvver call to place, an' tink it is a sin to present. Dat reminds me de month de farmers tuning in on milkin' tuvver.

I dunno I been in fertile fault wid dis fresh weed, kaze I is de best weed I I was ever in, an' it's a mighty long way to de next one.

De little sins dey suggested to go to de sun, but some of dese sun-wound tink it an hot hot him dat he hab to gib up and bunnie.

It's a long lum what ain't got no turnin. Let ole man be dat's turn too short and turn de wagon over. So don't drive too fast.

De race question is mighty easy to settle. Let de white man keep on be de white, an de nigger black, an' fellow de rule reigns, an' gun leaks round de hungry, an' let settle jis like coffee.

When I see a man gwine home with a pallon of water and a pound of bard I know dis fere's a good, ob man to sleep peaceful ob his possession dat pound bard.

Dere ain't no sun in gosnin over spilt milk, for tow to cow de milk was half-wated, an' dat's plenty mo' water in de kettle.

Old Papers.

Along with a ton years' birds-nest de area rule a bachelorette newspaper, yer remember dem, yer know, dem mornin' papers? Here for the latter days a Chinam could jus dat fine. Almost every one has heard that a newspaper spread between the bed blankets affords more protection from cold than an affidavit blanket, and women admit the assumptionable weight of blame. But I have seen a lot of domestic economy practiced to a wrinkle, yer know, to make the old paper last. The wife of his first in newspapers of which he had plenty, is then wrappings of which he had none.

Will dat kind yous fire warm? I asked. Dunno what old-woman-like he answered—sent truthfully. As a close economy, a bright paper under the vest was sward ob patriotism.

Jim tuk his newspapers jus as good a preservative against heat. Not an emptiness on one good draw up and in stormy even the top layer was strong enough to hold the pin manufactured. A pneumonia felt of sewers brings his throat home wrapped in plenty of papers, and they took fearfun then cold yer, ain't dey? Dey tinks.

Many a homesick Lonely how to make comfortable cozy pillows and patch comforts by cutting papers in long narrow strips and rolling them. Dey tuk dem home. Times low

HE'S A NEGRO PROPHET.

And Georgia People Think His Quaint Observations Contain All Wisdom.

Smithville, Lee County, Ga., boasts a colored philosopher named John Sprattlee, who is known to his acquaintances by the familiar title of "Uncle." He makes a great many startling and sensational observations, some of which have been thought worthy of a place in print. Here are a few of his quaint assertions from the Louisville Times:

I done know ef dis 'scuff is a free'n' grass or no, Ann; I know some folks dat dasn't say grass at all.

De sprits is, ever ans' make hay while de sun shines, an dat's why dere's such a scarcity of hay. Folks won't like de sun, jes' so.

Religion is a great blessin', but such folks have a call to plow on rain it is a call to preach. Dat counts for de scarcity ob farmers 'mong de colled race.

I done b'lieve in findin' fault wid dis heah wor'. Kase it's de best wor' I was ever in, an' it's a mighty lotter ways to do wot one.

De Bible tells de sluggard to go to de ants, but some ob dese ants would rank it so hot for him dat he hab to git up and hustle.

It's a long time 'twixt pleb'gin an' turnin'. but tek care he doh't turn too short and turn de wagon over. So doh't drive too fast.

His ever question is mighty easy to settle. Let de white man keep on lie'in' wiles he do nigger lie'in, an' foller de mule tendful, an' quit lardin' round de kentry, an fill'y settle jis like coffee.

When I see a mon goin' home wid a gallon ob whisky and a pound ob meat I know dat dere's a pork ob misery to cherp pound ob impossum in dat feddle hole.

Dere ain' no use in grievin' over spilt milk, for ten to one de milk was half water, an' dere's plenty mo' milk to de kentry.

Old Papers.

Along with a last years' birds-nest do man rate a back-number newspaper, yet circulation tells more gold nuggets (opinions) than for the latter date a Chinese coin for the former. Almost every one has heard that a newspaper spread underneath the bed clothes affords some protection from cold than an additional blanket, and without adding the uncomfortable weight of the latter. But I have seen a set of domestic economists so amused by a tramp so clever as to make this one pay. He wrapped his feet in newspapers of which he had plenty, in lieu of stockings, of which he had none. "Will that keep your feet warm?" I asked. "Sure thing, sah—wooden shoe" he answered, cordially. As a cheapspectator, a folded paper under the vest will ward off pneumonia.

But the old newspaper is just as good a protection against heat. Set an inverter on one and draw up and tie securely over the top. In the morning, one will find the ice unmelted. A poetical friend always brings his from home wrapped in plenty of poesies, and they look fresher than cold storage can keep them.

Many a housewife knows how to make comfortable couch pillows and porch cushions by cutting papers in long narrow strips and folding them, the question of making bouquetholders or trimmings from a back-timbery are easy to answer.

When celery is large enough to bleach, instead of banking it up with earth, wrap each bunch in half a dozen thicknesses of old paper, well tied on from root to crown. It is equally good a protector against frost as banking, or a shelter, spread between the rows and weighted with stones.

A few cents worth of back numbers from a newspaper office are equal to dollars' worth of the last mentioned article, and though a little much too flimsy to be used generally, "As a Gamekiper it owes matches, and for smoking smokehouses is a better one comfortable than cotton. It makes the clothes in the cellar and warehouse look neat, and wrapped around the glass fruit jars "furnishes the jelly which is as useful as the air to sound sleep." Butter-cloth newspapers are no new thing, but it may not be generally known that a cheap and durable door-mat, equal to sisal, can be made by laying flat of old papers on bagging when into sections three inches wide, and packing them together on edge in a frame of wood. When soft or hard coal is burned, in an open grate, a dampened newspaper placed over the front makes a serviceable blower that never has a dry paper.

We now have nothing about the time-honored scrap-book, but for amusement for the children on a rainy afternoon, nothing comes near to many pleasant hours cutting the advertising cuts and display letters from old newspapers. They are gymnastical and other figures are cut on the kindergarten plan to make from them.

For cleaning rusty chandeliers there is nothing quite so good as for packing dishes or glassware. The mice know the value of fresh city paper so well for bedding that it would be strange if it some clever Yankee had not invented a machine for shredding it for use in stables, as is done in some cities.

The insignia and pennons are always glad to get ancient second-hand rigs. Soon as have to be cut or torn are worth half a cent a pound for waste paper, and if there are any so soiled or worn to keep that they might be burnt, pack them into a paper case, with turpentine and rosin, and have a medium for kindling—Good Housekeeping.

Touching Story of a Dog.

A touching incident, illustrating the higher forms of animal instinct, is told of a dog which was the companion of Warrington Flanders Steele, who was killed in the wreck at the Providence Railroad station in this city recently, save one beaten. Herald. Mr. Steele lived at Boylston Station and the dogs usually accompanied him into the city and attended business, carrying a daily paper in his mouth to his family. After Mr. Steele's death the dog manifested constant uneasiness, wandering about the house, whining, and going from one person to another, asking, what had become of his master. After the funeral one day disappeared, and a search disclosed the fact that he had come in town, and was wandering about the station and yard, appealing to the people employed there, and where he knew, in a most pathetic manner. The purpose in search of him tried to persuade him to follow them, but without success, until one of them secured a paper, folded it, put it in his mouth, and pointing toward home, told him to go home, to spring forward, and run off, as happy, apparently, as before the bereavement.

GEO. W. MILLER.

A Royal Wandering Minstrel.

The Archduke Maximilian, shot in Mexico by the Juarez Government about the end of our civil war, was in his younger days famous as a singer and player on the guitar. While travelling around on foot, a pastime which was a passion with him, he would occasionally stop along the hearth road and sing a song or two or play some entrancing air.

Once while thus engaged he was heard by a number of peasants, who, quite ignorant of his identity, listened to him with rapture and appended him with vigor. "If you come to the inn," said one of them, "with that voice and that touch I can promise you a good glass of wine, if not a little more."

Falling in with their humor, Maximilian accompanied them to the village tavern.

Here he rendered several choice melodies with such skill and taste that he had, so to speak, his audience at his feet, and, though the tavern vintage was not the best, he drained glass after glass with his new found friends.

Finally he announced that he must go, and when the jolly Boniface found him determined to do so he took his hat and went round among the mellow, collecting a fair sum, to which he added something himself, and offered it to the Archduke.

Seeing the honesty of the motive, he took the coins and put them in his pocket, thanking them for their appreciation and kindness. At that moment the Village Squire, who knew Maximilian, happened to come. Seeing the crowd around him and not knowing the cause, he called out "Stand back, you clowns! Don't you know it's the Archduke Maximilian, your Prince?"

The tavern keeper fell on his knees in his fright and offering his money generously was the crowning infancy of which he had been guilty he asked that he be pardon.

"Not a bit of it," said Maximilian heartily, "it's the first money that has been honestly earned by any of our family for a thousand years and I'm going to keep it as an heirloom."—Philadelphia Times.

The Oriental Aspect of New Mexico.

In many parts of New Mexico the landscape features present an aspect not dissimilar to certain parts of Egypt, Syria, and Palestine. There is the same clear air, high lights, and semi-desert spaces bounded by plateaus and sand hills, and winding through the flat sandy valley, a silver stretch of river. In the foreground the scattered trees—the New Mexico sycamores—are conspicuously spreading slightly and in clumps. The low, flat-roofed, flat-fronted houses of sun-baked brick or lines akin to the soil add to this impression of the Oriental aspect of the country as contained in many of the streets and courtyards of the towns of its people. In the open fields are the threshing-floors of beaten clay, upon which sheep, goats or oxen trample the wheat from the straw, and the grain is afterward winnowed by the process of tossing it from blankets into the air, and in secluded communities the place yet is trodden from the grape in a wooden tube by the naked feet of men and women, and fermented into wine in great urns, or earthen jars as large as barrels. In these hamlets, even, as in patriarchal times, drawn the wooden, one-handled plough or creaking primitive wooden cart by remnants of ropes stretched across their horns.—Harper's Bazar.

An English "Cottage."

The Decorative "cottage" of the duke of Bedford at Bedsleigh, where he is entertaining a large party of friends is a compactly in name. For it can seldom be equal in such a sense as expressed on the gardens and grounds which contain sixty miles of gravel walks and grass rides. Embowered in one of the most beautiful places in great Britain, but its owners like their fun only about a month in the year.

A Chance for All.

Mrs. Gabb: "Are you going to have your dress made in the latest?" Mr. Gabb: "No, I guess not. She hasn't no use for money." Mrs. Gabb: "Well, I wouldn't be discouraged at that! Some of the styles born in play classic, anyhow."—N. Y. Weekly.

The Stillwater, Minn., penitentiary has a remarkable timepiece.

E. A. Garland, a Wisconsin man, has invented a peculiar clock. It consists of three cigar-boxes, on pivots, one to denote the hour, one the minute and the other the second. The shells revolve on the pivots without apparent mechanism to give them motion. Mr. Garland intends making one with glass balls and dangling an incandescent lamp in each ball, so the clock can be made to serve as a lamp as well as a timepiece.

Norwood Notes.

Geo. H. Van Pelt went to Chicago Monday.

Arthur Whitman, of East Jordan, has been spending a few days in town visiting friends.

Arthur and Jim Chase returned to their home in Chicago last week, but will be back again July 1st.

Chas. H. Bergason, his son Charlie, and Clifford Clark, of Chicago, arrived by the way of Traverse City Tuesday.

John Kyrelka, of Traverse City is in town.

The band boys had a nice crowd at their New Years dance. Watch out for another very soon.

One of T. H. Burgess' horses died a few days ago. Every old settler knew Burgess' horses, they were among the first if not the first team brought into Hayes township.

Joel Weaver, who was the first surveyor of Hayes, spent New Years with friends at Cadillac.

On the table-lands in the northern part of Hayes, the farmers find gigantic pine stumps scattered amongst the hardwood, indicating that in a former era the country was timbered with pine. The bodies of the trees have decayed years ago. Probably ages ago when the Mound Builders ranged in this region, while travelling by the lake Superior copper mines, they were faled to sleep by the wind sighing through the branches of these same pine trees.

One of our Hayesites got himself fixed up for the New Year with a big window under his off eye. The contents were cut bias and embroidered with the McKinley bill.

North Manitou island potatoes are becoming noted for their excellence. Several St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago firms sold in their winter supply from there this season.

Traverse Bay Eagle: Mr. E. O. Hale, of Old Mission, has been experimenting a little with amber cane and with the sugar beet, and has left with us a molas made from each. To manufacture the beet syrup he ground up the roots in a cider mill and evaporated the juice upon the kitchen stove, and, in this crude way, obtained five gallons of good heavy syrup, showing that sugar beets grown in Grand Traverse contain a good deal of saccharine matter. Mr. Ellis raised half an acre of amber cane and from it obtained 83 gallons of fine syrup. From these experiments on the part of Mr. Hale it looks as though the sugar beet matter is worth investigating.

Rev. Adam Clarke visited his old home and friends last week.

Wm. Burns and Etty Gregory were married on New Year's day.

Miss Abbie Matchett now resides in Charlevoix.

We regret that any farmer in Charlevoix county should be so moved by the Horton Creek mill posters as to express a wish as one did in the SENTINEL last week. It is hard for us to think that he is a real farmer, as the farmers of this county have more honesty and Charity than to express such a wish. If the people want to build a mill at Horton's Creek, or at any other point in the county, we should not begrudge it. As for our farmers buying timber, such is not the case, for it is true that some have been compelled to mortgage their farms to pay than sell the timber to pay the high rate of interest that has been imposed upon them, it is those who hold the mortgages who have stolen the timber, and not those who have lost their homes, they have stolen the life, home and happiness of the victimized farmer. Let the farmers not only help one another, but let us help our home industries and business men.

The Methodists of Hayes Falls have secured a fine new lot, and will at once erect a chapel, which they will use until the church office is completed.

East Jordan has a religious crank by the name of Moses Thompson. Moses was born in Africa, and his mind is still wrapped in the gloom of the dark continent.

—Captain John Dudgeon died at his residence in Kaministiquia last week. He would have been 70 years old Saturday, Jan. 10. His health has been poor for three years. He was born near Belfast, Ireland, lived at Detroit seventy years and has been in the grain business here since 1848. He served in with, and and one brother. He was a member of the Masonic order and an exemplary citizen. Mr. Dodgeon was a Charlevoix reader last summer.

—Friday last week a party, consisting of Frank Sisson, W. A. Porter and Chas. Chamberlain, might have been seen, (so the story goes,) wending their way into the woods about two miles with guns and game bags. Lines were all landed for rabbits, and the last one of the party missed was made for their companion—Frank Sisson. George Miller had among his available assets a shotgun and lame leg, so he was first considered of the real live article. Mr. Peters secreted his money in the bottom pocket of his hunting coat, but Mr. Sears was "in the pocket." When the hunting ground was reached, the dogs were carefully placed in a good position, the Potters and Chamberlain led their companions through the paths with a cross in guarding. Sisson within a gunshot of the enemy. Chamberlain's guilty pleasure a million and a half looking the trail, he unconsciously came and out in the vicinity of the Dodge, which was occupied by Miller, the discovery cost him several digits. With the quickness of thought he fired at the rabbit, and the sassing was scattered upon the snow. Frank Sisson was sore by, and as the live rabbit was drawn his way he fell for the game, the sagacious gentleman's sinewy arm. Mr. Peters the intention of saving the glass eyes of the decoy, Chamberlain tagged the head—all there was left of it—and it was found on his person to verify the fact that he had been hung on the gallows he was sentenced to hoodlum. Sears was cross, Miller and Capt. Partridge, has only one pleat silent partnership and no makers intent.

TO HELP A BROTHER.

Knights Templar Who Will Submit to a Horrid Sacrifice.

Chicago, Jan. 9. A week from next Sunday at the Emergency hospital portions of skin from the bodies of 25 or 30 knightly members of St. Bernard commandery, Knights Templar, will be cut off and grafted upon the naked flesh of John Oscar Dickerson, 44 years old, a brother Mason, in order to save his life. Mr. Dickerson has been recorder of St. Bernard commandery since its organization in February, 1870.

A year or so ago a cancerous growth on the upper portion of his thigh and the right hip began to annoy him, and in time it became so painful and dangerous that a surgical operation became necessary.

The operation revealed that a good portion of the skin and flesh should be cut away with the cancer; so much, in fact, as to render it impossible for the exposed edges of the skin to unite and form a complete covering by natural growth.

An attempt was made to graft a piece of portskin upon it, but without success. A few days ago a delegation from St. Bernard called upon the attending surgeon to learn what could be done. The doctor hesitated a little, but finally told them that if the wound could be covered with human skin there would be no doubt of a complete cure. The members of the commandery told the doctor that whenever he ordered it men would be ready to give up to his knife all the skin necessary to make whole their sick brother.

A meeting of the commandery was held and the action of the delegation was instantly approved, and every one of the 700 members volunteered to submit to the surgeon's knife. This number being far more than was needed, the commandery ordered that a selection should be made from the entire membership.

In accordance therewith, about 150 members have been selected to appear at the hospital one week from next Sunday, ready to permit portions of cuticle to be removed. The surgeon will probably not need more than one third or a half of them, and will have the choicest, physically, of their ranks there to choose from.

Dr. Lecuyer informs the hospital the secreted must that morning take a thorough bath, so that their skin may be fresh and pure. They must also have abstained from ardent spirits for 48 hours previous to presenting themselves for the operation. Each, too, must bring a razor with him, thoroughly sharpened and free from stain or blemish. These razors will be used only upon those to whom they belong.

—Dr. Crozier returned from Manistique Saturday. He sub-let the pile driving contract and the furnishing 100,000 feet of pine at Manistique. The contract for furnishing 125,000 feet of hardwood timber has been let by Nicholls, Lewis & Bates, of this place.

The Freeland Furnace says: We have made up our minds that we will have to pay a pretty large sum for seed potatoes next spring. Whoever has good sound potatoes now, let him be careful with them and not waste even the smallest tubers." And the Farm and Home says: "The damage to the potato crop in the net has been great through a large part of the United States, the disease extending even into Canada. Prompt advertising the crop material, in the central western states so that potatoes are likely to be a big value before the crop of 1891 enters the market. Those who have seed potatoes to sell will get a good price for them next spring."

—Hon. Winans' recommendation to make the office of state game and fish warden, will beyond doubt, be acted upon by the new legislature. Warner Bloom, of St. Joseph, one of the leading democratic papers, has a well developed idea for abolishing the state office and at the same time protect the fish and game in counties where they abound. "The plan I have been thinking over," said the senator, "is to enact a law providing for county game wardens in counties where a stated number of citizens have it necessary, and where boards of supervisors will provide the compensation—say $400 or 500 dollars—of a county petition the supervisors to appoint a game and fish warden in their locomotive their duty to themselves it and leaves the matter to the optional with the body which has to provide for the warden's fees.

C. E. W. H. Engineers.

We received entirely reliable information yesterday that a corps of C. & W. M. engineers are at work on their line east of Ecorse.

We informed said they were setting stakes—evidently cross-section stakes.

Other information from a source close to the C. & W. M. officers confirms our belief that the company intend to begin active operations in the spring.

General Manager Heald has not yet returned from Boston, where he is attending a meeting of the board of Directors.

A REVERIE.

BY HENRIE L. ALLANSON.

I am drifting along in a beautiful bark
Far out on a boundless sea,
And the song of the waves is the sounding deep,
Has a mystical charm for me.

The moon that is shadowed with purple and gold
Is cold in its regular pale path,
And the waves are tipped with a frosty mock at
Our pleasure, and laugh at our wrath.

There are breakers and rocks, and shoals, and storms,
Where mists and omens stay,
Where the shadowed waters know the hardness
Of fate.
Are already drifting away.

They are drifting away to one with the years
Where the sunlight has faded and gone,
Where the mists are ever impenetrable
In the dim twilight of a dreary dawn.

Oh, waters of love, that falter and break,
And speak of the past ever sorrow,
Bring me back to the beach the day star of hope
Till they break on eternity's shore.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE EVENING TALK.

As an escaped clock, with odd cachalotal chimes, struck the hour of ten, Ethel, in her white dress and trembling hand, lighted a candle, possessed herself of the strange-looking tools, then opening the wardrobe, and drawing back the door, stepped into the passage and passed through the small door in the opposite wall.

As this opened, she looked timidly around for a little entrance in the robed corner in which she was to find the basket of food.

She found herself as soon as the small passage was lit, in a long, narrow, dark gallery or corridor, that led directly to what Sir Reginald assured her was the Haunted Tower. At the end where she stood, however, on the left hand side, was a door, fastened with an odd-looking iron hook. This bolt be gently, and with a beating heart she opened it.

Close by the door she found a small basket, and on the hook hung most conveniently a hat also sample.

Stepping quickly, she again fastened the door, as Sir Reginald had instructed her to do, and passed down the corridor.

There she found the entrance to the tower, and, emerging into the broad bright, sunshiny day, to visit this spot, she turned, as she had been directed, to the lower side corner of panels on the south side, and immediately disappeared in the faint crack that she knew must be what was meant by pushing the panel. Ethel stood for three times, when the panel turned and there by the shelves.

Opening then the basket, she found filled in small pieces, supplied of broken biscuits, bits of chicken, potatoes, and quite a variety of such stuff as she liked. This she placed on the shelves upon the wooden plate upon which it was heaped. Then gently closing the shelves, she slowly shuffled around, and with the same side, returned to her the plate, and the panel closed, ready to be pushed open by the lever.

"That are what I have been trained," she thought, to empty the plate and return it.

Ethel was instantly called at his intelligence.

She listened for a moment, but all was still. Shooting to the panels, she found, as they closed, a mirror, so as taking up unobtrusive, knife and basket, she passed the latter around the table, fastened it securely, and reached her own room in safety.

Once locked in, the poor girl gave a sigh of relief, and dropped into a chair to calm herself before she could proceed to her duties for the day, and fill up her plans.

The cook required of her had been a singularly unpleasant one. She was a brave young girl, and had endured her few feelings of fear, but she had trembled, because the thing required was secrecy.

She dabbed up spots of all kinds, and her honest, open nature revolted from the whole affair.

Had she not solemnly promised her aunt to assist, she believed in any service he might require, in order thus to secure a safe home and a quiet, unselfish life, she would never have consented to the task she had now forced.

"However," she reflected, "there is certainly nothing wrong in a nun's keeping secret his possession of a valuable box so long as he is candid enough to his wards himself." But when he came out, she thought his best plan would have been to send for its owner.

Was it the owner?

Probably so for off that the creature had been, and the mysterious box.

All this did not distract her much as the week Sir Reginald had said about the Haunted Tower. This duty was easy and simple, and, as far as she could see, silly, but not colonel, but pretending a place haunted, and using strange flights and machinery to keep up the evil appearance seemed to her the height of foul and wrong, and she slandered as she thought of his words, that after awhile he should require this assistance at her hands.

She did not fancy, as has been said, a part of her duties, yet revolted, but that was almost more than she could understand.

But how could she avoid it now, when her word had been pledged? how refuse at the time, when urged by a nervous, suffering, and pitiful person, who had just terribly wounded whose life almost depended on her prompt keep perfectly quiet?

In view of his fearful situation, she felt that she could do no less than make take to relieve him of his intense anxiety on the subject; and could you say of strange the obligations laid upon her.

One thing, however, she decided to do, she should take some evening hour to explore the ruins and that Haunted Tower. Now, in order to satisfy my mind and perhaps enable me to explain the mystery to the friends, who, I hope, I crave your kind permission to visit the premises. Yes I that my mission?"

It is impossible for me to grant it, When these things were first whispered here, about twenty-five years ago, we, as a family, were accordingly managed by counsel, visitors to the spot, and for this thing because so much of a mystery that we closed forever from the "Haunted." No, you must not ask this, Doctor, as I cannot consent to the place being entered after being so long sealed. As it is, take my word for it and be satisfied. It is merely a whim of the brain, an optical delusion, something better to be forgotten.

Elfenstein said no more, but his world proved to be a surreptitious visit there. If not a permitted one, as this mystery he determined should be run down.

As soon as it was, he happened to glance toward the young girl opposite to him, and saw her hand lend the over the book she held, while a sad and pallid expression had floated over her speaking face.

Shifting then good-morning, he rode away, wondering "why Miss Newcraft should have seemed so deeply moved?"

After the reading had concluded, the lamps had been wheeled near her further attendance upon him, therefore she started out for a round to leave the grounds.

She had not gone far before she regretted having done so, as she was joined a short distance from the house by Robert Elfenstein, a man she instinctively disliked.

This afternoon he seemed particularly disagreeable, as he felt into his usual tormenting way, only embellishing it by gross and fulsome flattery.

The man was tall and fair, and possessed a great advantage of a pretty face, and from the first look into Ethel's speaking eyes, and upon her rare beauty, he had acknowledged that he had never seen a person that so exactly met the standard of the beautiful he had raised in his soul. Yet he proved bearing in his presence, her detesting from his presence, and his such evidence of her dislike that he had retained, and consequently desired to annoy her in every way possible during her stay at the Hall, through a spirit of revenge.

Ethel's flattery, he saw at once, was utterly distasteful, therefore persevered in it.

"O my dear Miss Newcraft, the fates certainly have indebted me, this time. To think that I should have met then your beautiful self, just as I was bound to a ramble, is so fortunate for me! Indeed, I dare-hope shall be so, for I shall constitute myself your devoted attendant."

"Mr. Glendenning, you will excuse me, if I decline your services, I shall pass for a quiet walk by myself, and thereafter, and certainly longer upon this occasion."

"Pardon me, my angel, my time is at your disposal, and I am bound to insist upon accompanying you, as I could never be so lonely, lady to stroll around without a protector."

"Sir," said Ethel, now really losing patience, "there is no danger certainly to be met with in your uncle's grounds. But since you over otherwise, I shall indeed return."

So saying, the young girl wheeled about, and began rapidly to retrace her steps.

"You will do no such thing," was the insolent reply, as Robert sprang to her side, seized her hand and drawing it firmly under his arm, held it tight, and threw her back to the walk. "When I propose walking with a charming girl, I always do it."

"Whether your presence prove agreeable or not?"

"Whether my presence prove agreeable or not."

"Sir, release my hand. I have no desire to go further. I shall never be at that your presence is disagreeable, and I shall return to the house without delay."

"Notwithstanding that, my dearest girl,—

"I am neither your dearest girl nor your angel, and you have no right to address me in this manner. I am Miss Newcraft, and I request you to release my hand, and let me go."

Mr. Glendenning, you will excuse me, if I decline your services, I shall pass for a quiet walk by myself, and thereafter, and certainly longer upon this occasion."

Mr N. B. Bates, secretary of the Republican state central committee, has been travelling in the west ever since the November election, and among the funny things he heard was the bitter complaint of a Russian Jew in Salt Lake City, who said: "I had lived in Kazan, in Vienna, in London, in New York, and in Chicago, but never in my life till I came here did I been called one d——d Gentile."

The sudden and complete collapse of the great harvester trust will be welcome news to the farmers of the country, and to everyone else not interested in the combine. It is pleasant to see it go to smash before it got fairly on its feet. Such combinations in certain cases may be justified, but as a rule they are to be condemned in public interest in this country, regardless of politics, as down on trusts and monopolies almost all business combinations are branded as trusts. The result of the collapse of the harvester trust will doubtless in some what disadvantageous to some individual companies, but this will probably be a blessing in guises that will throw their goods on the market below profit figures.

A Soldier's Story

A paper by Gen. Bragg in the current number of the North American Review shows a good deal of pride that lays on the Indian question. It is not an original report but a plain statement of the situation as it presents itself to a man who enjoys exceptional facilities for seeing it all at his glasses. Naturally it is a military view, because Gen. Miles is a soldier, but it can hardly be said, on that account, to be a prejudiced view. While the dirty foul usage of Indian affairs they were managed with economy and a greater measure of success than has ever attended their management by the Interior Department, by a very less sincere new policy, by the government and the people from the land, and cannot afford to accorder a single a territory to a man paralyzed for Indians. The independent Indians themselves recognize this and have bowed to the inevitable, but there enough still of the dissatisfied and unreconciled to listen eagerly when the promise is brought from the of a "Messiah," who is to restore their to their hunting grounds. It was because this promise by behind the Messiah, Doesn't Care for the Presidential Nomination in 1892.

THE Washington Post has the following Presidential gossip. Its information is understood to be Senator Hearst's. Pure.

Secretary Blaine gives it out these days that he is not a candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1892. He never conversing with a Democrat who asks him what he is going to do, but he does let it out in confidence to his friends that he is not a candidate for the Republican nomination. He says that he does not think he could win the election if he did. He says that he is very much in demand in the Republican ranks, particularly with the southern wing of the Republican party. He says that the Republicans in the south are very much in favor of the world's fair at the Columbian Exposition, and that if he should be nominated he would be very much embarrassed in engaging the support of the southern Republicans. He said:

"I am a Republican and a protectionist, and I have made a name for myself in the Republican party. I have been in the Republican ranks all my life, and I have been a Republican ever since I was old enough to vote. I am not a candidate for the Republican nomination, and I do not think I could win the election if I did. I am very much in demand in the south

Boyne City News.

The Sleighing is doing for us what we expected it would; it is making things move.

We think that the Boyne Falls News has next thing to "snakes in the boots" else whence these dire, uncanny ghost stories, to scare children whose parents take the paper. We hope for brighter emanations—something not so closely allied to the "Middle Ages."

County Clerk Kerns is getting things in ship-shape order in his office and his motions indicate that the people have made no mistake in giving him their suffrage.

Sheriff Hurd has re-appointed Deputies Stevens, Myers, Nowville and Burdick. Under Sheriff is not yet announced.

The Board of Supervisors seem to be looking toward economy in caring for our indigent. Just wait until this until 1893 democ-legislature gets through legislating and we will have no "poor." This is the "doctrine" boiled down.

Some folks used to say our town was dead. We have gotten over that and are keeping pat with the busy world around us.

White & Co. advertise for 50 teams and have work for them all winter.

Mrs. J. M. Harris is on a visit to relatives in Trenton.

Walter Ware and wife are visiting in Southern Michigan.

When Walter Clifford Post No. 5, A. H. sets out to have a good time, they have it. Their installation on Saturday evening was one of them.

THE INDIAN WAR.

Matters Rapidly Approaching a Settlement or a Big Fight.

Special Telegram to the Sentinel Today.

Gen. Miles expected a conference with the chief yesterday, but after waiting two hours he received word that the Indians didn't mean to make an advance, but would talk with him. Miles said he would receive ten of their chiefs and talk it over.

The main camp of the hostiles is three miles long, and contains 7,000 Indians, 4,500 of whom are warriors. The friendlies won't have a hostile in their camp. They have dug rifle-pits, and say they will capture or kill any who approach.

About five hundred crazy, frantic hostiles have broken from their camp and are committing depredations wherever they go.

Officers at Pine Ridge predict peace or a big fight soon.

Harrison Mitchell, of East Jordan, has been granted an increase of pension.

The only connection between Boyne City and Charlevoix during the six months exile of the former town when navigation closes is by a stage line 6 miles long, and the grizzled old man who drives saves 16 miles to a whisking ride across Black lake six miles. The ride is as thoroughly dangerous as exhilarating and six people nearly lost their lives there the other day. The horses dashed to an air hole near the middle of the lake and the stage went to the bottom. Fortunately it struck a sand bar and the passengers rescued them selves and the horses.

East Jordan Enterprise: E. A. H. Cole writes from Brackett, Texas, that he "will take the estimate, but the people I think are desperate set of customers. I know they celebrated Christmas in great shape, guns and knives the single article. I am getting ready to go up into the mountains."——Papers were served last Monday on the secretary of the East Jordan Driving club in a suit brought by Edwin J. Porter for the recovery of money due on notes given by the driving club for lumber in the buildings erected on the fair grounds.——Rev. Wm. Hodge, of Chili, South America, arrived Friday night to visit his father, Rev. Alex Hodge, of this place.

Rev. F. Davis, the born pilgrim of the Elk Rapids Progress, and Miss Emma C. Chamberlain of Mendon N. Y., were married at the bridge house in Mendon, Dec. 31. —R. A. Ellsworth has charge of Con. Hanse' livery business for the winter.

—Bankruptcy commencing. Sheriff advertised yesterday on business.

—W. H. Dashner went to Chicago sunday, and will be gone several weeks.

—Pat O'Neill is lying very low at his residence. His death is hourly expected.

—A hundred reserved seats sold for the first night of "Esther," as we go to press.

—Herring spearing through the ice in Round Lake is now over, and the catch is large.

—Lions of Jerusalem announce that next week they will have something of interest to say.

—Reserved seats for "Esther, the Beautiful Queen," opens sale at Cutler's & Warner's drug store.

—Don't fail to hear "Esther, the Beautiful Queen," Friday and Saturday evenings at this week.

—Chas F. Dixon is a close mouthed fellow. Saturday evening, at Lewis Grand Opera House.

—Mrs. Mary Wood will Friday for Detroit, where there is the saddest of sorrows for her.

—The contumes for "Esther" arrived from Detroit to-day. They are all new, and of most elegant texture and design.

—About thirty seats were engaged by telephone last week from East Jordan, South Arm and Boston, for "Esther."

—Mr. Chas. F. Dixon, of East Jordan, did an serious duty, well and satisfactorily, "Queen Esther," introducing a solo between acts.

—Miss Kirwin, of Vermont, with "Queen Esther" company, Friday and Saturday evenings, at Lewis Grand Opera House.

—Henry Lithey, was granted a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Martie Lithey, at Grand Haven the other day, on the ground of desertion.

—John M. Ackert leaves Sunday for a two weeks absence in Lewis. He will stopover at Grand Rapids to attend Council Lodge, F. & A. M.

—W. A. Smith and W. J. Smith, may leave sunday for Grand Rapids, to attend the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M. and the dedication of the Masonic Home.

—A young son of Geo. Cooper, of Morton, died last Friday, quite suddenly. The funeral was held Sunday and a number of Charlevoix friends attended.

—Several well developed cases of la grippe are reported by the physicians, one of the victims being Dr. LeFevre Dunkel. Miss Stoner, of the public school is another.

—Capt. James Beaubien arrived from Grand Haven, Saturday. The captain is married, but his wife is with him. They will make Charlevoix their future home.

—The new Baptist Church parsonage, in E. Whitcomb's Add. Arthur, was over to C. V. Cook's to-day to hear whatever, and is very much of a gentleman, not withstanding his paddress.

—Mr. Lewis, of Bradfordsville, Ky. now stopping at Elk Rapids, and an accomplished singer, will accompany the Elk Rapids "darkies" contingent here, and will sing a solo between acts. She will also assist in the chorus.

—A number of the ladies of Charlevoix have entered a club for Thursday afternoon dancing class. A large attendance has been secured, and each lady gets her class for a dollar. A man is not allowed within a block of the vicinity, except the driver, and he is put under heavy bonds to not be tempted into the conversation.

—The Methodist and Congregational people united their services in the latter church sunday evening. Rev. Mr. Barnes preached an interesting sermon on "Snakes," in which he commended Bradbury's beautiful oratorio of Gog music.

—The jury list embraces the following: Charlevoix, John Horton, Harrison Hickford, Hayes, Moses Cooper, Henry Hamlin; Norwood, A. N. Chase; Marion, Antony Clark, Robert Gregory; South Arm, W. L. Brown, Freeling, John Colbrook, Lemon Lake, Ray Bay, Richard Bassock.

—We copy the SENTINEL and Tribune Union Prices, for one year at the low rate of $1.50. Upon request by mail, we will have sample copies of the Tribune Union for any one to see address, that one may become delighted with the paper, and we cheerfully urge upon our readers that they at once avail themselves of this opportunity to secure this double paper.

—A good audience attended the Mason vocal contest and concert Friday evening. Miss Ella Lewis, daughter of Dr. Levi Lewis, was awarded the prize in the vocal contest. The third part of the program announced several excellent numbers. Miss Krug, daughter of Dr. Brown, sang "Go wheelbarrow." Mrs. Krug has a voice of good timbre, and remarkable purity and flexibility.

—Mrs. Campbell, at her yacht building establishment, is putting in the boat of the sloop yacht Harry Burke. She is cramped from a recent fire-hound to a standing keel boat, her lower iron keel weighing three tons. She is lengthened twelve feet, will have new keelson, mostly new frames, and all new planking above water. She will be 65 feet long over all, and will have a 22-foot cabin. When launched, she will be a "cup" craft. Her owner said will not race.

—R. H. Calkins, of this place, is the inventor and patentee of a legal blank case that at first sight resembles nothing so much as a large, fine, or coal minute office. It occupies but little space, yet has capacity for holding every blank known to law or real estate, and will hold two quires of paper. The title of each assortment is stamped on the outside, and can be excellent for amythinny in the line intended. Mr. Calkins has letters patent, and will arrange for terms upon inquiry.

—Rev. J. F. Elding who was appointed to Stanwood during the last M. E. Conference, in the three months he has been with us, has, with his excellent wife, won the hearts of all who have come to know them. In that time he has been a severe sufferer with acute rheumatism, in his right arm and shoulder. At the time he had his friends have hoped it was only temporary, but it has seemed to prove affirmative and unfortunate, for own will and the wishes of the society, he is to be relieved of his pastorate, contributed to by medical care and all hopes of taking up his work in the spring. He is suffering too most, which he deserves after 25 years of constant work. We understand he goes to Albion where they have a daughter living, and there Mr. Elding will take the massage and electric treatment. He has the full sympathies of the society and friends generally, and we trust he may be spared to do some good future. Charlevoix Lodge, F. & A. M. Chas. Hosmer, Jr. Lee Mills-gas, of Detroit, and a son of Rev. Mr. Millgas, received a letter Saturday from his sister, stating that their father is seriously failing, and that his recuperative methods progressive poisoning. Mr. Millgas left Monday for Detroit. Rev. Mr. Millgas was the pioneer pastor of the Charlevoix charge, and has here many warm friends who will be troubled by the unfortunate news.

BRIGHTER THAN STARS OF NIGHT.

BY MRS. SAPPHIRA S. MORANCE.

What bond to unite the heart my own,
The very brown in its coldness
Whispered, she loves but you.
My glance caught one spread unclosing frown,
Where dreams dissolved in mist
The whisper came was true.

The world continued by a sunset night
Lay half asleep in the tender light,
As together we walked home.
The whole world seemed mystic with love,
Brighter than stars of night
And ah was her love my own!

What were the million stars of night?
Could they make our future pathway bright
Like her love? Nay, nay, verily!
We bowed and intoned, Allah, alone;
No need to ask was her heart my own,
We were pilgrims, happy lovers.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XIV. (Continued.

Sir Reginald was a very unpleasant pale person.

Of a fiery disposition, he would rake mountains and valleys and leaves Mademoiselle's answer in his opinion.

This feeling, together with his jealousy and unreasonably words, often brought tears into the eyes of Ethel, who was entirely spoiled by such harshness.

Sir Reginald, in spite of his own heart, whether it was very hot duty to be made and bear the sweet, pale face daily scans so dear to her.

Then she would remember the promise given her mother, and would try to banish such unpleasant scenes from her mind, by striving to think of some way in which to lead his thoughts into a purer and better channel.

"I must find some good here for some reason! perhaps I am punished by God, and it may be that it was to be instrumental in saving the soul of this poor man. But how can I obtain the least influence over him, when he is so uncurious and so unreasonable. The only way that seems at all feasible will be to introduce some religious reading, and perhaps now and then drop some thoughtful and holy sentiment. But he is so rank an unbeliever, and so utterly profane, I fear every effort in his behalf will prove a failure."

That afternoon she found an opportunity to put in force one of her good resolutions.

Sir Reginald had asked her to read the daily newspaper.

This she had done, and after a jealous sneer spent in the perusal of the book Bible from the table near by and wilfully and commenced reading the first bewitching chapter of St. John.

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me.

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

"And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

"Thus far had she progressed in her conscientious effort to bring something holy to bear upon the unfeeling world, when suddenly the book was snatched from her hand, and Ethel, startled and pale, while in a tone of thunder, and with flashing eyes, he cried out:

"Stop! I can stand this hypocritical cant and never care to hear from you, or any of your fellow saints in your church, I have had enough to be heartsuffering, without having religion thrust in my way at every turn."

Hot, Sir Reginald! Ethel's proud soul shrieked aloud, and she was ready to cry with a trembling voice, "Is the world from God's own hand, or is it often proved a source of great comfort to Christians even in the hour of pain—

"Oh, yes! I know all you wish to say, but I tell you that I want no religion for me, for I am no Christian. I do not believe in this Deity, and I won't take it around."

With a sigh of weary resignation, Ethel crossed the room, and picking up the volume she loved so well from the floor, she tenderly smoothed its rumpled leaves, and restored it to its place on the table.

"Stop!" he roared, as it left her hand. "I said I would not have it around! I am you to shall not even remain in this room. Carry it instantly away, and never let me hear even a word regarding it in the morning, from you or anyone."

Returning after delivering the bold, imperious command, Ethel carried the sacred book to her own apartment, and again resumed her task of reading, long pathetic stories and descriptions of news and events that had occurred in the fashionable world, while her soul was yearning to give to the wicked master of this strange old Hall the same bread of life.

In case of Dr. Elfenstein's visits, he had been provided with a quantity of exceedingly choice flowers, by a grateful patient, and suddenly remembering that dismal life Ethel Severgall was leading, he resolved to divide them with her.

Driving then, first to his own home he gathered the flowers, he selected the most beautiful, and forming them into a graceful bouquet, drove into the castle with them in his hand.

Ethel was in her own drawing-room, and he immediately from the gay, with his floral gems, so unlike the dreary, dark, and the wintry world, he was half tempted to attract his attention, suggestive in the extreme vanity, that he could instantly present them to herself.

But, to her deep chagrin, he merely made a few passing observations, and talked on, without giving her vanity to work with him.

Hitting her lips on keen vexation, she scattered as she retreated to the room she had left.

"I will stay here and watch for his return. Something seems to tell me that those flowers are for that odious Ethel Severgall. If they are—"

She did not finish her sentence aloud, but the contents took a fiery open spot of bitter feelings that would seek some petty revenge.

Ethel was passing through the upper hall to her room, when Dr. Elfenstein entered the room, and as he pronounced Lady Severgall's name in very unpleasant accents, she

CHAPTER XV.

ANOTHER SUSTAINED ADVENTURE.

After Ethel had left the room he was jointly requested by Ethel in the grounds of the castle, he was unusually moody, and the more he pondered over the cold, pale face of that beautiful girl toward herself the more he felt inclined to punish her for her ill-concealed dislike, and even as a handsome wealthy, and popular man.

Her decided repulse of every overture he had made, served but to enhance in him the desire to fix to subdue her pride and turn her haughty, but fawning slaves to his feet.

Robert Glendenning was not, as Ethel had supposed, a dissipated and degraded man, but owing to the strange influences of his childhood he was a vain, restless man, with a very high opinion of himself, and of his own, together with a beating, and a very unpleasant. Under proper governance with young he might have developed into a noble man, but as it was, he was a man of the world, and a slave to his passions, and he allowed his nature to become perverted, and drifted into the weak character we now find him.

Immediately after his last adventure with Ethel, while yet chafed and sore on account of it, his mind turned to the graphic account of the proceedings of the Sunday in Edinburgh, and to some bold description of them, then combined by saying:

"She's a proud, stubborn lass, and I do delight in humiliating her lofty feelings. I intend to do all I can to bring her from the high pedestal on which she has perched, and if I can only succeed in making a prisoner of her so that he will send for away, I shall be delighted. But I wish you would help me.

"I will do all I can to reduce her abominable pride, I assure you, though I do not know how I can do it, unless I can shall, however, repeat nothing on account of my promise.

"Scattering you! What do you mean? Did you make a promise to do so?

"Why did, indeed."

Then he hesitated and looked expectant with the object of their discussion.

"Well, I promised to do anything your further authority, I guess, if I gave me a chance to lower her in Sir Reginald's estimation, I shall do it. If possible, I shall call on you for assistance."

That afternoon the wished-for opportunity arrived.

Ethel happened to be in her own room a few moments, when she heard the following conversation take place, which gave her a plan upon which to work.

Sir Reginald had received a note from a neighbor to rendezvous to some very important private business, which he found necessary to attend to immediately. Wishing some intelligent person to see his stakeers with Mr. Fathlin in regard to the matter, he had summoned his

A NEW YEAR'S SERMON.

PREACHED BY THE GREAT BROOKLYN DIVINE.

He Describes a Humane Movement: The Christian Sunday-school Is Not Wrong; Christians Should Not Lose Courage, but Should Pass on to Victory.

Dr. Talmage's sermon of last Sunday is a thrilling battle cry to ministers and Christians everywhere, calling upon them to go forward to victory. Some of the incidents of his sermon are:

The embossed preacher spoke as follows from the text Luke xxv. 47, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high."

For a few months, in the metropolis of God, I have two pulpits, one in Brooklyn and the other in New York, and thinking of the kindness of the printing press as a ever widening opportunity, I address my sermons and readers. I come now to the pulpit in Brooklyn, and I am sorry for a forward movement in the church and the world, which I have never seen. That there is such a religious movement is evident from the fact that never since our world was swung out among the planets has there been such an outpouring of the Holy Ghost as at overthrow righteousness and make the commandments dominant, and the whole Bible a dictum.

Mighty revivals are in progress in the kingdoms of thousands, and the spiritual temperature of the world is practically rising 700 degrees nightly. Ever since the Pentecost, the Holy Spirit is the office, the office, city, state and nation, but the time is approaching when all worship them for ever and ever, Amen.

The Christian Sabbath means life, aggressive life, and not simply, and not spiritual rest. It is being secularized and abolished. As in the Christian business of our own country had exhausted the Sabbath, the Christian and Roman saviours have been invited to pour their energies into the Sabbath, and enough where our American saviour are the Sabbath, and Cleveland is probably waiting to see what a Republican Congress does before declaring his position on the silver question. With true Democratic instincts he will do the other thing.

A circuit judge in this state elected the justice mills for a couple of days, because, said he, several members of the bar and newspaper suit desire to visit Lansing, and as they, in the role of Democrats, have been waiting thirty-six years for this opportunity, and as they may never again enjoy a like privilege, I think it but just that we accede their request. The court will not adjourned."

The legislative correspondent of the Detroit Free Press recently made a violent attack upon the State Board of Health, its secretary, Dr. H. B. Baker, and its methods of work. It also made a great outcry because of its expense to the state. The whole animus of the attack is displayed in to the comments made on the fact that the tenure of office of the secretary is made to continue until removed for cause. In other words, it is beyond the immediate reach of the lambding Democracy. An office which is established to do good work and which has proved itself very highly to the average Democrat.

In regard to the howl of the Democratic papers in regard to the sound of the tax sales advertisements, by H. H. Aiken while auditor general of the state, Mr. Aiken in an interview says: "If the papers that are commencing on for that work will look up the tax lists they will find that they are on the wrong track. It is customary for each auditor to make awards for the year he is in office, and the law allows them to be made any time after the first of July. In nearly every case a year ago they were made during the first part of December. I have made the award but three years previous to 1890, and it was a part of my duty to make it again for the past year.

Comr. Road System.

The convenience resulting from a simple system of street naming and numbering is too well understood to need demonstration. An adoption of a similar system to the roads of Cuyahoga county, California, devised by A. L. Bancroft, has been made. It is worthy of consideration in connection with the general improvement of country roads, recommended by Gov. Woodbridge in his message to the legislature of this country mentioned. The Pittsburg Dispatch gives this description of the system: "Briefly, the system devised by A. L. Bancroft, is to name all the roads in a county, and then lay them out in numbered blocks ten blocks to a mile. Beginning at the county seat, the numbers run out on principal highways. By roads, crossconnecting roads and lanes are appropriately named and numbered. Each block is given two numbers, one each side of the road. Where more than two are needed, the letters of the alphabet are added to the number to properly indicate the position of houses. A chart is then easily made, showing every junction of one road with another. Started on the right road, a stranger can go, without asking a question, direct to any house to may have the address of. The guide boards, bearing only the name of the roads, are as intelligible lying on the ground as the so-called distance guide board in proper position. There is no necessity to indicate distances, the numbers do that. Starting at any point, a calculation of the numbers on the roads traveled will give the distance."

No great cost would be attendant upon the adoption of such a system in Michigan. The already completed survey of the entire State into township and sections, and the running of the geodetic part of the county roads upon the section roads would make expensive surveys almost unnecessary. The system would prove a great convenience.

Tobacco and the Boys.

To the Editor.

At a recent platform meeting at the Methodist Church the topic discussed was the influence of the tobacco habit on boys. Prof. Enos gave his observation as a teacher. By request he kindly furnishes the substance of his remarks for publication.

G. S. BARNES.

In response to an invitation to state some of the results of my observation of the effects of the tobacco habit in the public schools, I am happy to be able to say, at the outset that I have not been competed to use as much of it as comes under the notice of some teachers. I am thankful that my job has not fallen in towns where the use of tobacco is as extensively indulged by boys in the school, as it is in some places. Worth or Charlevoix compares favorably in other ways with other towns where I have been connected with the schools. I am not prepared to say, but that is not a material point. I cannot give exact statistics, of course, but I call to mind cases that have come under my notice, in sufficient numbers to make what I believe to be a fair estimate of the relative condition of those whom I have known to use tobacco, and those who did not. I can confidently expect to find all the boys in school, whom I have known to use the weed, I have never known one whose scholarship was up to the average of his class. Looking over the history of quite a number of years, my uniform experience has been that those boys have none of them possessed the intellectual capacity, the power to apply themselves to close mental labor, and hold themselves to that work, which an equal number, taken at random from the other class, have shown. They have not that spirit of work, that wholesome energy, that vigor, which makes successful students. I would not be understood as saying that all dull boys smoked, nor users of tobacco by any means. There are occasionally found dull pupils among the girls. I believe cousiders an equal number of boys and girls, and making a fair statement, there is about one dull student among the girls to four among the boys. And careful reflection leads me to conclude that three of those four boys are victims of this habit in some form. I believe I may safely say that three fourths of the dull boys in school are made so by tobacco, and I have been as fearless in tobacco case as any pupil attending. These remarks apply to the mere matter of scholarship, it has further been my experience that almost, if not quite universally, the boys using tobacco have manifested, in a degree, more or less marked, certain vicious characteristics, in addition to a low standard of scholarship. I make no claim to be understood that I use the term vicious not in the sense in which we apply it to prize birds, or those who are grossly immoral, but rather to indicate those manifestations of temperament, those tendencies toward what is dangerous, which give anxiety to the teacher and the parent. I think three fourths of all the truants, and three fourths of all the other cases requiring severe discipline, among boys of the higher grades, have been found addicted to the use of tobacco; and further, that every one so addicted has been a subject to discipline, more or less frequently.

The effects of this habit are so much less in the high school than in the intermediate and grammer grad-, The reason for this is patent; very few victims of tobacco can get into the high school. They seldom reach even the lowest standard of scholarship required, and so fall out of school, and those who do manage to get a position there, invariably maintain it for only a short time. They have not the traits of character indispensable to success in that work, they fall behind in their classes, drag heartsoy for a time, and surely fall out at last entirely.

A large proportion of the pupils whom I have graduated were girls. This discrepancy is due, also to the use of tobacco entirely; for there are always other causes to take the boys out of school. I have never graduated a boy who indulged this habit; not because I have not wished to do so, but because I have never had such a boy who could get within sight of an honest diploma.

This leads me to speak of another point that may not seem of so much importance to some, but those observers who have impressed it upon my mind with great force. It is one, I think, that you can scarcely outgrow upon a young man, a greater curse, than an expensive habit, even though the habit itself is otherwise harmless. In the case of tobacco, the habit is not only deadly in its physical and moral effects, but it an expensive one that works additional harm to boys in school, from that cause. The boy may beg, or borrow, or steal his tobacco for a time, to make up what he needs more than his spending money will supply, but the time soon comes when the ucket money which he gets from his father, will not meet the demands of his appetite. He is then out of school at the first offer of a job that will furnish the needed funds. And he does not want one, the shorter mention what disease which was good for." —N. Y. Herald.

A Novel Method of Taxation.
Around the first difficulty that beets a people upon a system for themselves is the question of revenue. Where is the money to come from? Taxes, the torment of all nations, also appear in the world. His method of raising them in some of the nations is quite interesting and novel. He collect monetary as made of property, instead of taxes, and of its every being, to be used to his advantage. The system is known as the "progressive" system.
A, who owns $1,000 worth of property, pays a tax on the half of it, B, who owns $2,000 worth, pays taxes on eighteenths of the whole C, who has $100,000 worth of property, pays taxes on ninety-nine hundredths of it. He pays not the proportional twenty-three times the amount of A's taxes, but fifty times as much. The immediate is obvious. Nobody wants to be the rich person or of sympathetic to the poorer classes. That probably would not change places with the poor knowing every one is in the same, that, they enjoy taxation. The plan is not always popular with. Leaving every man to assess himself has the disadvantage of leaving many a man poor, reading from income sells, and of them. When a rich Swiss dies, however, the government counsel of his estate quickly seizes assets for his property, and every penny of taxes held into a man declared, together with a fine equal to the amount, and then. —*N. Footsteps of the Rain.

From the marsh after, across the distant meadow
Stealing or rating mist float wildly in the shadowy Seaward, seem to circuits and glistens, sandy
Merged in the long line of beach, desolate and lone.

Sunrise (thoughful mist), lies joyous voice
Of the birds on a serenity autumn strain;
Lo! the sun, the sun, the sun, and neither
Cloud nor storm, nor rain, nor tempest of the rain.

Hear the footsteps on the roof like strolling
Dancing merry, merry, merrier and yet
Stealthy. Hesitates to frolic from the dripping Eaves to meadow fairy broken measure by.

Tapping, lightly tapping, sublimely and Hushed, soft and low, measured rise and
As I listen, every moment a distinct change—
Now the music is more sensible, such a Night Of.

O, my soul! my soul! why doth thy steps so Lead strangling thought away among the Ancient years, gone—long forgotten, mostly—Long forgotten, long forgotten, mostly—
Long forgotten years!

Years! Why, they are, after all, but lamentations
Wailing long, dimly clouds freshly sweet
My dead hopes will spring to fullest life Again.

Years! Why, they are but a vision, a mere Vision, a vision, a vision, a vision, a vision
And, and, I listen to thoughtlessness based Breaking the weary silence, as with voices Long.

THE DEAF AUNT.

The noise of wheels was heard in the street. It was the stage-coach, with the load of a nephew, Jonas, returned from the railway station. It passed by Mr. Merrian's door, a poor man. He had met with reverses, and now lived in a much less pretentious house than Jonas, Mrs. Graves, who, despite reverses, still lived upon Mr. Merrian as her social inferior. He was a very pretty man, however, and far from being as worldly as Mrs. Graves. He had three children, all at home. His wife was an excellent housekeeper and a very good mother. Mrs. Graves, though her pretensions were much less.

"I am glad to see you, Aunt Jane," said Jonas, shaking hands with her. "I am sorry that you have lost your hearing," he said.

"Did people can't expect to hear as they grow older," said Aunt Jane.

"You must make us a good, long visit," said Mrs. Merrian, who now appeared.

"I will see," said Aunt Jane.

"I always liked Aunt Jane," said Mrs. Merrian to her husband. "She is always so gentle and kind. It seems very pleasant to have her in the house."

"Yes, I know. The only thing I think of is that we have a small house, and we can't make her as comfortable as we just could."

"Well, we will make up in the warmth of our welcome."

Aunt Jane seemed unusually happy that day. As night approached she seemed thoughtful, and finally commanded to Mrs. Graves:

"I must write a letter to my niece to explain the situation."

An hour after the following note was written in the hands of Mrs. Graves:

"DEAR ELEANOR: I have concluded to stay where I am during the remainder of my life. I am happy here. I feel that I am in my right place. I am delighted to have my nephew Jonas come to see me. I am happy in my home. As a rule, I do not care much consulted for the departure of my Tromper my ear, but I have some money. Yours, AUNT JANE.

"P. S.—My hearing has been wonderfully improved, so that I can hear Jonas with my eyes tolerably."

The letter filled Mrs. Graves and Arabella with dismay. They had counted on deeply against the old lady that they felt that no apologies would be adequate. To add to Arabella's misfortune, when the young clerk learned that there was an estrangement between her and her rich aunt he unpermanently deserted her for another young lady.

Jonas Jane bequeathed the bulk of her possessions to her nephew. He will inherited the following provisions: "I bequeath to my old Eleanor my best grandmot, which I found on one occasion of excellent service."—Horatio Alger, Jr., in Yankee Blade.

There is a starved man in Atlanta, Ga., who wears eye glasses with a gold rim. His wife wears eye-glasses too, and the two pairs are just alike. They are the parents of three children, the youngest being 10 years of age, and each of the children is near-sighted, and they also wear glasses.

Facts Worth Knowing.

Egg stains can be removed by rubbing them with common table salt.

To keep flies off gilt picture frames fill three or four onions in a pint of water, and apply with a soft brush to the frames.

When whalebones have become brittle they may be used again by soaking them in tepid water for a few hours, and then drying them.

Lamp wicks must be changed often to insure good light, as they will soon become clogged, and the oil does not pass through them freely. A clear flame will be certain if the wicks are soaked in vinegar 24 hours before using.

When washing windows, looking-glasses, etc., be sure to put a little ammonia in the water. It has wrought labor, and clean them much more effectively, giving as well a much finer polish. For general cleaning, ammonia is the water will remove dirt, smoke, grease, etc., much better than anything else.

Do not wash coarse cotton shirtsleeves in hot water, for it will make the cloth shrink. Use cold water, and small brushes, which are made for the purpose of cleaning combs are easily prepared at little expense, and will give one of these the comb may be thoroughly cleansed, wiping well and following with a soft cloth afterwards.—Good Housekeeping.

Glad to Get Back to Jail.

A Biddeford, Me., man was so glad to be sent back to jail by the court, after he had experienced one brief day's contact with a heartless world that he refused to walk to Alfred and take one ultimatum along with him to save the officers all trouble.

TWO BIG CHECKS.

Rockefeller's Was for a Million, but Jay Gould's Was for Two.

The biggest check ever given in this country was that given by Jay Gould to Thomas Allen for the Iron Mountain, says the N. Y. Herald. He had $1,000,000 to pay and he handed Allen a check for that amount upon his appearance at his office. Allen looked at the paper thoroughly and then said sans, and said: "Isn't this a good deal of money for one man to have in one bank?" "I don't know," replied Gould, "perhaps it is. Let me have the check." Allen then handed the check back to Gould, and he handed it over to his office boy, saying: "Here boy, take this check to the bank and have the cashier certify to it." And the boy went out and did it.

Rufus P. Ranney, of Cleveland, one of the most distinguished lawyers in this country, once told me of a check for $1,000,000, which was given by John D. Rockefeller. It was drawn in favor of Sam Andrews, another multi-millionaire, and was accepted by Andrews only because he was too proud to refuse it. Rockefeller and Andrews were poor young men in Cleveland together twenty to thirty years ago. In connection with Flagler and others they organized the Standard Oil Company, and at once began to make money and grow rich. Rockefeller in some way got the start of Andrews, and Andrews felt the very pulses of his growing power and wealth. He tried in every way Rockefeller in everything he did, and when Rockefeller built a big house in Euclid and Andrews put up a larger one, (one hanging satisfaction from Hell) in the new work he is" making one of the finest residences in one of the finest glimpses. Then Rockefeller bought a country seat near Euclid, and Andrews bought another, and so the battle went on. Now, no man ever was made president of the Standard Oil Company Andrews became very important to him in order to show his importance he raises in one day and asked Rockefeller to see the matter getting along." Mr. Rockefeller said nothing, but wrote a check on sight, and Mr. Andrews asked for a look at the books of the company.

"You can't see the book just now," said Rockefeller, "but if you come in a day or two I will have a statement made out for you."

A few days later Sam Andrews came into the office of the company. In reply he was handed a long sheet of paper containing the items, which he was told was the statement of the condition of the Standard Oil company. He looked at it, and as he did so his face got red and his eyes grew angry.

"This is not what I want, Mr. Rockefeller," said he. "I want to see the books of the company, and I want to see the books I want to sell it, sheet."

"What will you do with the sheet?" replied Mr. Rockefeller, very coolly reaching for his cheque-book.

"I want just $1,000,000 cash," said Andrews.

"All right, you shall have it," replied the president of the Standard Oil Company, and he thereupon wrote a check for $1,000,000 and gave it to Andrews. Andrews had to take it or back down. He was stubborn, he was free, and he had for the next few years been making money so fast that he spent $1,000,000. He put Tilden, Hewitt, Cooper, government bonds and scattered the money around there."

A CANADIAN MISSIONARY.

Father Lacombe and His Unwarring Plea with the Blackfeet.

The history of the conquest of the wilderness contains no more pathetic episode than that of the life and work of priest Father Lacombe, warned the Blackfeet Indians against the encroachments of the gold-fiends. He went to the Blackfeet and succeeded in the battle before him is recount. He told them that the white men were building a great railroad, and in a month their workmen would be in the virgin country. He told the wonderful red men that unless they would be slaughtered they must stop their warring and be friends. Beseeching the greatest men and women, he told them he loved the Indians and desired their strength, he implored them that unless with those white men would result in death, in the destruction of our Indians, and in the most horrible physical and moral degradation. He implored and he pleaded. Then they consented and collected. Then they spoke through and said:

"We have listened. We will keep upon our reservation. We will not go to see the railroad."

But Father Lacombe doubted still, and yet more profoundly was he confused of the end of this, as about the "children," as he eagerly calls all Indians, "children." So once again he went to the reserve and gathered the chiefs together, and the sorrowful tones of the soulless, diabolical selfishness of the Blackfeet. Again the grave warriors promised to obey the law.

The railroad laborers came with camps and money and figures and numbers, and the prairie thundered the echoes of their disappointment strokes. And one morning the old priest looked out of the window of his hut and saw and saw carrying a great grey smoke ascending from a score of Indian chimneys. He was amazed. Angry, amazed, he went to his dwelling and opened it, and there upon the ground sat some of the headmen and the old men, with the lowest brow, ashamed. Surely the priest's wrath and his disappointed. Now he was to close the name of children's tribe, when I tell you that their spokesman in last answered with the excuse that the buffaloes were gone, and they had to get, and the white men brought money with the squaws and gin. And what is the good? There are always ways to get the Indian beside every settlement near the Blackfoot reservation. And one and amusement filled his troubling foreigner young the sky, when I was home, and said: "Mark me. In fifteen years there will not be a full-blooded Indian alive on the Canadian prairie—none."

Through all that revolutionary railroad period, and the rush and massacres, Father Lacombe and Crowfoot kept the Indians from wicked and from depredations and from murder. When the half-breeds arose, Father Lacombe and Crowfoot pledge his word that the Indians should not rise. The priest represented the government on those occasions. The Canadian authorities recognize the value of his work. In the great authority on Indian matters beyond our borders, the author of "Indian Bibles," in Harper's

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY,
Unexcelled in Fertility! A Wealth of Timber! One Hundred Miles of Navigable Coast-Line!

CHARLEVOIX, as the outlet and outlet of a region bordering on miles of navigable inland coast possesses elements of commercial importance that only require railroad connection to make it the metropolis of Northern Michigan. A railroad is assured! Study the map of Charlevoix county, and the relation it bears to Charlevoix harbor. Railroad connection with our lines or water traffic at this point, means concentration and engagement of trade, transfer of travel and shipping, lines of north-shore and inland steamers, and investments in manufactures. TALKING ABOUT SILVER.

The Senate Still Considering the Financial Bill.

THE financial bill was taken up in the Senate on the 5th, and Mr. Daniel spoke in favor of the unlimited coinage and unlimited issue of silver. Mr. Plumb followed Mr. Daniel. He considered the action of the senate with favor but did not think it was a settlement of the question. He had hoped it would include the purchase of bullion for coinage, an amendment that had been stricken from Europe, and the friends of bimetallism and the other financial institutions of Europe had been watching with great anxiety the difficulties of the situation. He had hoped that the senate would have included Wednesday's amendment, which asked the silver bill of last session, and where its constitutionality was questioned the amendment was intended to meet those difficulties. The bill as it came from the house was a silver bullion purchase bill, such that so much a month should be purchased and coined. The senate had adopted the principle of free coinage, and the silver financial institutions of Europe had been watching the outcome of the difficulties of the situation. He had hoped that the senate would include Wednesday's amendment, which asked the silver bill of last session, and where its constitutionality was questioned the amendment was intended to meet those difficulties. MASON & BERDAN.

South Arm's genial Town Clerk, Harry Branch, has returned to his post of duty, but upon his return he found that Alva Coulter has filed bonds and had possession of the books and records. It is understood that Mr. Coulter's appointment was not made by the usual mode of "nominations," "ayes" and "nays," if so, a contest will follow.

Petoskey Record: The annual meeting of the farmer's Mutual Insurance Company of Emmet, Charlevoix and Cheboygan counties, was held at the National Hotel, this city, yesterday, Jan. 15th, according to law. The reports of the officers showed the company in excellent condition, and the official statement will be published as soon as prepared by the secretary. Mr. F. M. Chase, of Boyne City, was re-elected secretary, and Job Aldor, of Emmet and Geo. H. Griffin, of Charlevoix, were elected directors for a two year's term.

Petoskey Record: Yesterday's papers contained statements regarding Mr. N. C. Griffin which caused great surprise here where he was so well and favorably known. It seems that letters were received by various persons in Lodington, coming ostensibly from relatives in various towns out west inquiring about the matter, and asking whether the family had received the life insurance or not. The letters being evidently written by the same hand, suspicions were of course aroused, and a Mr. J. E. Darr was sent out to investigate. He could find in Kansas City also that apparently well, Mr. Griffin' friends in Lodington believe that he is suffering from mental distraction, and many of his old friends here agree with them. His whole life and record are opposed to the theory of deliberate design to defraud the insurance orders to which he belonged; and certainly the writing of those letters which a ten-year-old boy would know would lead to detection, would indicate an unbalanced judgment.

Dick Bassett, the solitary inhabitant of "Man's Land," and well known as the hermit of Traverse Bay, is in the city visiting friends. The land in question is in the west arm of the bay, and is separated from Marion Island by several hundred feet of wind water. It contains about one acre of land. Bassett has lived there twenty years, and in that time he has been allowed to pay taxes or cast a vote. He has offered his ballot several times and always had interpreted exercise in did not live in the United States. He makes a good living catching fish, and has tried to help the island of the government, but the application came back from Washington marked "There is no island as described." Mr. Bassett is a full elected man of about fifty with thick brown hair and beard, now singed with gray. He takes the situation philosophically, and says he means to hold possession of the island, "even if it does not exist." The first year he lived there he locked his cabin during his absence, but one day the door was broken down and some of his property taken. Since then he leaves money, food and fuel in plain sight and the door is never locked. A note of welcome is always left, and Indians and white wanderers always make decent use of his hospitality. He is located only about a mile from the Traverse Bay resort, and is on excellent terms with the leading men of the association. While here he will visit ex-Sheriff Lamoreaux, E. A. Stone of the Traverse, George Stanton, O. P. Conklin, Jas. A. Hunt, E. A. Treadway and others. He is well educated and intelligent, and a great favorite in the vicinity of his home. He will remain in the city about a week.

About forty years old and only a few months big and awful good for its size," is the naval verdict bestowed upon Nortkport by those familiar with its history. Imagine a town that was settled in 1849, and in the present year of our Lord, 1891, only numbers about 450 souls, and you have it pat. For a number of years its progress was retarded by the red-wood business, all the settlers and business men, who made temporary stays there, devoting their energies to cutting up the valuable hardwood timber into cordwood, which was sold to steamboats for fuel; for, situated on Northport harbor is one of the safest, most commodious, and necessary harbors on the whole chain of lakes. When the cordwood business played out in a measure people began devoting themselves to agriculture, and they discovered that they had possession of one of the most fertile and profit producing soils in the state. The soil and climate are specially adapted to the production of the potato, 70,000 bushels of which were shipped from that port last fall, and the growing of all kinds of fruit, save, perhaps, peaches.

BLAZES THE WAY FOR '92

NATIONAL COMMITTEEMAN CLARKSON TALKS.

He Stands By the McKinley and Reciprocity Bills. Advocates the Generous Circulation of Republican Literature. He Will Support the Best Ballots Cast a Republican Can Cast—Salem in Shape as in Form.

"As I is the real issue of 1892," said National Committeeman J. S. Clarkson, in an interview the other day, "I am going forward, standing on the merits of the McKinley bill. That will make the tariff issue paramount and resolute. The McKinley bill has stood its fair chance. I believe it is a liberal act that good times and industry in the party have followed the enactment of every one tariff law, and that times and the downfall of the party coincide when there has been only moderate legislation upon tariff facts and industrial trade. We cannot have a tariff impossible and yet the Republican party has not offered a Democratic bill that has won its approbation. The Democrats have had control of the lower house of congress and have not even a good bill that could have passed the senate. The senate would need but little consideration, and yet we have not even that. The party is willing to go into the senate for the best tariff bill that can be obtained. Attend the new bill with the McKinley bill, and the new Congressman Newberry—I know of his ability—will, within days, well in manifesting fairness of all kinds, and I think it is quite time to begin to experiment of the McKinley bill. It has been only three months since the bill was passed. Its friends of all shades of opinion are confident and hopeful. Wherever there was a good reason. First, he was a skilled business man, and he was a skilled business man, and he was a skilled business man. The prosperity of the Republican party must be in direct to the country. The Republican prosperity is to be increased by the McKinley bill. Its friends are hopeful. Its labors must be shown that its chief aim is to benefit the industrial interests from trade wants. The Democrats be generous with the tariff, and the party the Democrats elected to Congress this year or to other offices are more of Republicans. It shows the work of a presidential party press. The Democratic party have made their press wonderfully aggressive. Whenever their press was growing strong in the Republican party they fall upon him and force him into the earth. The Republican papers are different. Some of them they are not defined, from, and, second, do not defend their leaders. The Democratic party they do not allow a dissent to the leaders. Our press is more independent. It sees it in more vigorous fashion than it has been during a party. It is a matter of pride that we ought to be proud of. Issues and its neighbors—of disputes alone. The Republican party is not opposed the American democracy. Democratic papers are smart to cover attacking any man's leaders or any man's religion. Many good Irishmen and other men are different and have gone to party this way. The sympathy of the Irishman is with the Democrats, but many Irishmen, taking up the papers immediately find their tariff which issues have something they have a right to defend, and they are of course angered and driven from the party. Political papers might well imitate religious papers, to the extent of never attacking any church or any man's religious belief. There are many good men in the Democratic party who are in the wrong in cases. We should so broaden our national contents and we broaden our national press that all men who believe in the might stand together with us and work for the party.

"The issue of protecting Republican literature should be begun now. The paper to strengthen every union in the local paper. The best Republican in a paper that is honest and that stands up for its local interests. Join the county paper, then the State paper, then the national. The circulation of Republican literature should be increased by three hundred million copies per year, so as to prepare for the struggle in '92. The Democrats convinced, I think, to be fair and honest. The Republican circulation of literature is much. The newspaper, the office and the magazine are the three leaders from an weapon which they cannot resist. The most and most honest strong weapon. The most and most honest. The campaign of education, some which shall go to every American home and prove to every intelligent mind that the Republican party is the party of prosperity. Its maintenance always the average family in Europe, the prosperity and welfare of its members, as well as the real strength of the people, lies with the Republican party and its Republican principles."

A POLITICAL MURDER.

How Mississippi Democrats Celebrated Christmas.

It was a lively and lamentable Christ mas they had at Carrollton, Mississippi, when the Democratic Syndicate decided upon the dispatch assessing the killing of Professor Matthews. The Matthews killed all characteristic. All the Democratic of this town celebrated the religious event of the festival of peace and good-will. They the negroes who usually are so joyous on that day, kept quietly in their houses and did not even attend their churches. The negroes in the city of Mississippi the day of the Democrats the day of celebration and Radicalism, may be a good day. The negroes who attended, lost their, too, made full use of the day of the Democrats the day of celebration.

The celebrants of Carrollton entered upon their celebration early in the day. Professor Prentiss Matthews, being an obnoxious Republican, was selected as the victim upon whom the Democrats should wreak their vengeance. Accordingly, a party of Democrats, on the morning of the day, went to his residence and demanded Mr. James Matthews, who was supposed to be the author of the Republican document, or large number of Democrats, assembled to see the fun. The Democrats, in the effort of the Republican party must be direct to the Democrats. Its prosperity is to be increased by the McKinley bill. Its friends are hopeful. Its labors must be shown that its chief aim is to benefit the industrial interests from trade wants. The Democrats be generous with the tariff, and the party the Democrats elected to Congress this year or to other offices are more of Republicans. It shows the work of a presidential party press. neglected to arrest him as he passed passed through the streets receiving the cheers of the crowd. Mr. Sherrill is a form the Democratic Sheriff arrested the negro and locked him up, and immediately released him, so that the feeling was quite high in Carrollton. That night he went to the Christmas ball and was shot down in the house, escaping trying with such other for the house of the Democrats. Thursday night, the day of Christmas, the day of "Peace on earth and good will to men," the Democrats held the Republican Postmaster, James Matthews, and, they, in the effort done to show their feeling and vengeance, the Democrats, the husband has been removed in the place of the Republican Postmaster, James Matthews, who was appointed to office in the place of the Republican Postmaster, James Matthews, who was appointed to office in the place of the Republican Postmaster, James Matthews, who was appointed to office

CHARLEVOIX, JAN. 28, 1891

Latest reports from the peach belt along the lake shore, show that about one-half of the peach buds are killed. As the weather has not been severe, it is hard to account for.

A PORTLAND, Me., woman took hold of a water faucet and couldn't let go for half a minute. An electric wire had sagged to the faucet, and the current was conducted to the water conductor to a trap in the cellar through the water pipe to the sink on the second floor; thence by the water pipe to the street, so that when she got her hand on the faucet of the water pipe she found herself a captive. But a gust of wind soon severed the electric wire from its roof attachment.

We recent published an account of one hundred members of St. Barnard Commandery, Knights Templar, of Chicago, volunteering to furnish the outside to England as a brother Knight to save his life. The opera ran several a week ago Sunday. The one hundred men were placed under a special course of treatment by the surgeon having charge of the case, with a view to saving the tissues and body of their skin in a perfectly healthy condition. Yesterday the one hundred reported to the hospital. Each bared his arm or leg and the surgeon removed from each, in turn, a section of skin, to be transplanted to the body of the sufferer. It is reported that several of the men fainted under the surgeon's knife. The affair was one of the most remarkable events in the whole history of surgical operations. It is said, whether the plan shall succeed or fail in its purpose, it is regarded as a character of the operation and the bravery of the one hundred men together constitute material for a most interesting record.

Vindicated by Experience.

Taxes is much of method in the persistency with which free-trade arguments continue their misrepresentations of the terms and effect of the existing tariff law. Confounded by the fact that every industry hitherto adequately defended against foreign competition long enough to become established on a firm basis has repaid it by a lowering in prices, free-trade Colonelites seem determined that the recently enacted law shall not have an opportunity for adding one more proof to the unbroken chain of evidence as to the economy of supplying the home market from adequate home resources.

Scarcely a day has passed, since the passage of the McKinley bill was assured, without seeing the columns of the opposition press, on both sides the Atlantic, loaded with denunciations of that measure, and prophecies of business disasters that were to follow its enactment. First in the list of calamities was to be the loss of foreign trade as a result of refusal by foreign manufacturers to pay the increased duty exacted in the case of a few articles, notwithstanding the fact that more foreign products than ever before were put on the free list.

And what has this prophecy been fulfilled? Precisely as has nearly every other one which has been promulgated by the free-trade cabal; its patrons has shown it to be false. Of course foreigners grumbled, as they always have done, at having to pay for the privilege of competing with our citizens in the markets of this country; but their anxiety to continue business was by no means a failure. The first months succeeding under the new tariff showed an increase of importers over the corresponding month in 1890, and this increase was practically continued to divisible articles. It further showed those same foreigners, whose trade it was prophesied would be withheld from us, bought from the United States very considerably more in 1890, than they did during the same month in 1889, and that they increased by $7,000,000, the average of those purchases from this country during the preceding ten months of 1890. The value of exports for the first ten months in 1890 was $695,550,000, for October, $77,091,504.

To this compilation comes the testimony of distinguished foreign traders under the operation of a protective tariff, and, following the same fate for all their prophecies of business calamities, the enemies of our protective policy are now industriously working to prejudice sentiment against the operation of the law, before the wisdom of its provisions are more fully vindicated by the usual prosperity that is certain to follow its retention on the statute book; and that, as they rightly fear, on issue for instance upon the result of the next national election. Nothing too prices to attempt to impede, or to hinder the continued prosperity of free trade given to the important page of history. Knowing as we do, among the free-trade shorter sin to be condemned with the solid facts of business experience, Grand Rapids Eagle.

"That is the worst fault I know of," said a comforter on one of the Green Island piers, as he pulled a sixpence out of a half dozen or so of small children's heads. The sixpence was held in a vise by a pair of big pennies of very large size, and the little boy was the proud owner of a pair of pennies, which he had bought for his birthday. "Yes, sir, in my opinion that is the worst fault I know of. I don't mind the pennies, but I have dissuaded lots of jobs from his sixpence." Inquiry developed the information that the boy had become a sufferer from the sixpence, and had not left the one spot off a day since 1875. He had been a sufferer he had when a big sixpenny piece, and he had dissuaded deserts by his coward in southern California where he had spent most part of the country. He had worked on a ranch, he said, in Nevada, he had invariably drilled back to the sea. He had gone to Brooklyn and then he had visited in South Africa but never for a single day did he get away. THE DAY IN CONGRESS.

Work of the Representatives of the People in House and Senate

In the Senate, on the 19th the time was taken up with the Vandenberg case. On March 20 nine are reporting executive sessions of committees, and nothing of general and pressing importance was on. Washington, December 21.—Senator Vandenberg, who was appointed by Governor Ben Fairchild, of Michigan, with $15,000, the value of postage stamps among them, his office in Hart Senate Wandenberg introduced a bill to establish a Congress of Industrial Peace, and Senator Wagner, of New York, introduced Senate Mr. Wagner offered a resolution calling upon committees of the senate for information or suggestion for a wind of prosperity. Senator Wagner has been busy with the Hebrew his country with correspondence, and he has received a number of letters from people who have complained to the wants of farmers, and to the social and economic life of the nation. Several committees have sent in suggestions with the project. Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, chairman of the committee on agriculture, has sent a letter to the committee on agriculture, and has received a number of letters from people who have complained to the wants of farmers, and to the social and economic life of the nation. Senator Wagner offered a resolution calling upon committees of the senate for information or suggestion for a wind of prosperity. There are 170 pupils enrolled in the Northport schools.

Copemish, Benzie County has been granted a village charter.

Bellaire has a new society called "The Skatelubelehelwenel."

Ludington will have a large furniture factory in operation soon.

Hon. C. S. Hampton has been appointed State Game and Fish Warden.

Manistique now has eleven secret societies, all in good flourishing condition.

Mr. Darrah of Clarion, has sold ten forties of timbered land during the past three months.

Miss Minnie L. Dreyer, of Atwood, was married to John C. Sayers at Tampa, Fla. recently.

The depot and eating house at Reed City was damaged by fire to the extent of $2,000 worth recently.

The Elk Rapids Progress, whose editor was married a few weeks ago, says that tears are woman's cross to bear.

Capt. Girard and Dan Meech have been camped for the past month, at the Cavanaugh castle on the bank of the Jordan.

The railroad company commenced to gather ice at Cadillac this week, but the crop gathered will not be near as large as last year.

A solid through train of wheat passed over the G. R. & I. last Monday for the east. It was northwestern wheat from Duluth.

Married at Milton, Monday, Jan. 19, 1891, by the Rev. S. P. Hewett, Mr. Clarence Hunt and Miss Jessie M. Hoits, both of Torch Lake.

Traverse City's grand Masonic fair opens at "high twelve" Thursday, January 29, and closes at an indefinite hour, Friday night, January 30.

One of the liveliest and jolliest crowds of people that ever crowded themselves into a sleigh box full of robes, crowded through the doors of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Coulter, Sr. of Echo, one evening last week.

Lew Washburn, who was the hero in the Uncle Tom's Cabin aggregation which last winter nearly killed the Captain and the mate of the steamer St. Ignace, because they would not make a spread trip through the ice of the straits for the crowd, has settled the case by paying $100.

Atwood Cor. Bellaire Bugle: Supervisor Stebbins is teaching Antrim school.——Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hoag arrived home last week from their visit in Ohio.——L. V. Nash is running his mill day and night, which makes plenty of work for men and teams.

Petoskey Democrat: About eight o'clock Tuesday morning Eugene Rose discovered and extinguished a pile of waste paper, sticks, etc., burning under the edge of the woodshed back of Rose & Shafer's storehouse. The origin of the fire is a mystery. It could not have been mere carelessness, and yet if it was deliberate incendiarism it is strange that the fire was started in daylight.

Harbor Springs Republican: At the meeting of the Petoskey Presbytery, held here yesterday, Rev. John Hoath was chosen Stated Clerk of the Presbytery in place of Rev. W. P. Gibson resigned. Licentiate Alex. W. Dodge was ordained to the ministry, and Rev. J. H. Hamilton was dismissed from the ministry. Presbytery adjourned to meet in East Jordan for the April meeting.

Mr. W. P. Duvell, of Bogie Falls, writes out in a send in the Boyne Falls News that week, admitting that he is a disbeliever of the bible and christianity, but asking why his christian neighbors should regard him as a "fool" man because of his belief, or want of belief, when his daily life stands for the contrary. He wishes to know how he would be a better man by keeping his doubts to himself and practically becoming a hypocrite.

Grand Traverse Herald: The friends of Donald McDonald were greatly surprised, last week, to learn of his death, which occurred at his home, in Peninsula township, on Thursday last. On the Saturday preceding Mr. McDonald was in the Herald office and paid his $3h advance subscription to the Herald. On the occasion of his last visit referred to, we had a pleasant chat, reviving memories of the pioneer days, and he seemed in his usual good health and spirits. On the following Wednesday, he was taken down with congestion of the brain and died the next day. —— The large and constantly increasing business of the banking house of Hannah, Lay & Co., has necessitated quite an important change in the working force. Mr. J. T. Hannah has taken the place of cashier, so long filled by Mr. C. A. Crawford, who will now have charge of the general office and manage the savings department.

On the tablelands in the northern part of Hayes, the farmers find gigantic pine stumps scattered among the hardwood, indicating that in a former era the country was timbered with pine. The bodies of the trees have decayed years ago. Probably ages ago when the mound builders camped in this region, while traveling to the Lake Superior copper mines, they were lulled to sleep by the wind sighing through the branches of these same pine trees.

East Jordan Enterprise: The East Jordan Lumber company contemplates making a change about the first of April, which concerns the state alone. B. Rich does may retire, and possibly the store may be discontinued. The lumber business will cease before.——Wm. H. Riley expects to move to Manistique time as soon as ——ore to Manistique where he will run a restaurant. ——oil.——When the family of Albert Miller woke up Saturday morning they found their three months' baby dead.

Ipsilanti Press: Louis Linnie and Alfred B. Nicholas of East Jordan were brought before Justice Kibby last Monday charged with stealing a span of ponies from Robert Somerville's barn a few nights before. They claim to have a good defense, but gave no evidence before the justice, and have both been bound over for trial at the Circuit Court. It is generally understood that their defense is that the man from whom Somerville bought the ponies traded for them on Sunday, and that they were acting under the advice of I. E. Fogg in taking them as they are charged with doing.

Kalkaska Leader: There is little doubt but that many northern Michigan farmers, with but few acres of improved land, returned more profit to their owners from a potato crop alone this season, than more pretentious agricultural outfits in the south part of the state, with thousands of dollars invested did from their entire product. And what is more, there are few years when potatoes cannot be raised here at a fair profit, and at least to one year out of four, they prove to be a veritable bonanza, to say nothing of other crops that do as well or better here than further south or west. The home seeker would do well to stake a note of these facts.

The Leelanau Enterprise is authority for the statement that grass will not grow on the spot of ground which was bathed in the blood of a Norwegian who killed himself three eight years ago. It says of the singular phenomenon: "From the time of the death of the poor unfortunate, the spot of the ground which was dampened by his blood has persistently refused to produce grass, though there is sod all around it. From that day to this there is a triangular spot of ground about three feet long and two wide at the base, on which the grass has persistently refused to grow. This is a fact that everyone who has visited the spot can testify to, and can be verified by anyone driving by in the road in summer."

Petoskey Record: On Thursday of last week, Mr. Seymour of Manistique, owner of the propeller Pentwater, was here and bought enough stock of the Petoskey Dock and Warehouse Company limited, to give him the controlling interest in the property. It is understood that Mr. Seymour has not made the investment with the purpose of "freezing out" the present stockholders or competing line, but in order to correct the management of the dock which was usurped by Chicago business and shippers at Ludington. Now that the Seymours own their own dock in Chicago and Petoskey, shippers of that line next season will have no dockage to pay at either end of the route. There are rumors that other parties are preparing to build a dock this winter, but whether there is a good foundation for the report, we have been unable to learn; as yet.

Archie Cameron has been appointed postmaster at Torch Lake.

Elk Rapids Progress: Parties were here last week looking the ground over with a view of starting a hoop factory.

The ferry steamer St. Ignace is to be so housed that the cars will not be exposed to the weather while being taken across the straits.

Traverse City is to erect two school houses this spring that will cost about $7,000 each. Other projected buildings make it appear certain that a boom has struck the town.

Manistique Herald: Sheriff Stewart brought Alfred B. Nicholas and Lewis Linnie to Bellaire Monday, and an examination was had before Jos. Kibby upon the charge of grand larceny, and was not concluded until midnight, when the people closed their case. The defendants offered no testimony but urged that they had no criminal intent, under a claim of title, took the horses thus. That the man from whom Somerville obtained them traded for them on Sunday and acquired no title. That having none, he could give none, and this being the case the horses belonged to the defendants and they were at liberty to take them anywhere they could find them without process of law, if they could get them peaceably. They also claimed to have been acting under the advice of Attorney Fogg, and that there was no intent to steal, but simply to take what they supposed was their own property, and under advice that they could rightfully do so. The court found probable cause to believe that the crime had been committed as alleged and the defendants to have been guilty of its commission, and held them for trial at the circuit court. Bail was fixed at $500 in each case, in the case of Mr. Nicholas it was furnished by his father-in-law, Fred Allen. Mr. Linnie is a poor man, who undoubtedly acted in entire good faith and has shown no disposition to mislead the officers but freely told them all the entire proceedings. In view of his circumstances and of his family, the court reduced the bail somewhat, doubtless and allowed him to return to East Jordan in the custody of Mr. Burdick, deputy sheriff of Charlevoix county to procure his bail.

It is stated that most of our boys who fail to pass the physical examination for West Point or Annapolis are rejected because of defective vision. The tobacco habit, generally caused by smoking, is also very common.

The D. C. & W. Franchise Forfeited, and the Rock Makes Talk.

Local News in Brief.

Yesterday was a busy day at the office of the D. C. & W. M. R. R. Co. in this city. The above picture is a fair representation of the scene in the common council chamber. About only a meeting was called, as which quite a few persons. The people thereon fully grasped the situation and the importance of the company, and asked no expenditure of the municipal at the council regarding the big iron bridge bonds already voted. The report a resolution was unanimously adopted as the sense of the council that the bonds cannot be spared for the purpose contemplated, as soon as reliable assurances were received that the D. & W. M. would build their line into Charlevoix within a reasonable time. Mr. Smith, acting as chief engineer, accompanied the council and gave a good talk on the road and its operation within Charlevoix, meaning. This limit it made no mistake in providing contingencies, the road will be in operation in Charlevoix in the one year of the limit, or the franchise is forfeited.

Much has been said and written about railroad matters here for the past three years, and Charlevoix has been prone to disappointment; failure has often followed promises, and Charlevoix has relented grievously on the road. But this time it looks as if Rome, not through much tribulation.

A Remarkable Romance.

CHAPTER XVII.

STORY MAKES A STRANGE ARRIVAL

Behold that our author's pen leaves the affairs of her friend until after the events above had occurred in and from Kansas, and all discovering that followed (and he will) Mr. Rogers's visit to the Dr.

When she (under the family goodnight and retired to her room, the room, in order to get out of her sight, with a chair in the hall, and sat down. Sorrowing herself for her unknown friend, she was in a state of mind to do anything in order to save her from the hands of the unmerciful Lucifer, and taking the ludicrous idea of the Dr. in a wanderer and passageway into the carriage beyond.

Possessing herself of the basket of fare, she opened it to see what was in it, with the thought, a precaution that the barrier had changed her mind, in case, that by no possibility could she be surprised, or, if surprised, be caught, then, passing onward, she opened the panel in a corner, and put down the plate of food upon the shelves.

As she did so, she heard distinctly a movement on the other side, which, being rather unusual, for the room was at most be well, and, quite sure that it resolved to say nothing of what had happened, and with knowing, and, in a confusion, to drive the entire circumstances from her own mind, and so be at peace.

The day passed on as usual, and when night fell, she was in her room, and, as usual, fell into a sound sleep, and felt that now, be, dead, all was right.

Poor Esther! little little knew the fearful consequences yet to ensue from her kind thought.

The third afternoon had arrived, and nothing had transpired to lead her to apprehend the lower trouble from that unfortunate occurrence.

She had, therefore, resumed the everyday life had left, and was fast driving the entire circumstances from her mind. This afternoon Mr. Reginald had expressed a wish for music, therefore she had brought her guitar to his lessons, and had sung several ballads for his amusement.

"I think," at length he said, interrupting her, "that it grows cloudy. Please look out, and tell me if a shower is approaching."

Ethel arose at his bidding, and, after examining the sky, returned, saying, as she resumed her seat:

"There is, indeed. A very black cloud is lying in the west, which foretells a hard shower."

"Then put aside your instrument and draw close to me, so I have some private conversation to give you in regard to a work work to be done tonight. Are so quite alone?"

"We are, Mrs. Fredoe left the room to prepare my some medicine, and the one you see there is my attendant," replied Ethel, trembling, she knew not why.

"Then listen intently to my instructions. If that dying races about half-past eleven or ten o'clock tonight, you must visit the Haunted Tower and put in motion some machine, I know not what, there."

"Oh, Reginald," exclaimed the shrinking Ethel, "please do not ask that of me."

"Child my. You just attend to my orders, and do what I tell you to do. Never dare disobey me."

The harassed girl, proceeded to give minute directions for the lighting of the lamp, and also for the movements of the frightful and hideous image there concealed.

At this conclusion he remarked:

"Do you think you understand every particular of the work I now require to be done?"

"I do," replied Ethel "that, sir, my memory from the whole thing. I consider it a wicked deception, and I beg you to excuse me from undertaking it."

"Who cares what you think about it! Obey orders and never reply. Do you shall, so do not dare to utter another word against it."

"Sir Reginald; I have faithfully performed every order you undertaked every particular of the work I now require to be done."

Jonathan G. Rundell,

THE SENTINEL has of late occasions to the past expressed a desire to see Hon. J. G. Rundell, of this judicial circuit, upon the State supreme bench.

Our desire to see him then referred arose from a firm conviction of his superior judicial mind, his splendid equipment for the exalted duties of the position, and his close touch with the people.

Judge Rundell, as a judge, is a distinct personality. There are few jurists like him. As a lawyer he is learned in all the terms implies, as a judge he is unexceptable. But his distinct personality lies in the close imitation of both these qualities with that of good old Richard von Hyke, doubtfull-minded, farmer horse sense, and his indifference to outward appearance.

The peculiar point who, when the judge parted with his old-fashioned gig, sold his horse that was his faithful servant for wanted, probably discovered this fact when it was got through with him, as have those who have found him looking up a case while lying in the hollow, or at least, an opinion in the court-room. The judge does not always wear a necktie and his clothes don't always set, but the overall leader of Methodism is honored by him, the supreme bench will be no loser, if he reaches it.

It goes without saying that the Charlevoix county delegates will be loyal for Hon. J. G. Rundell at the coming state convention.

Spring trade prospects are very feasible, and are steadily growing brighter.

I was ever thus. When a promising Republican becomes corrupt and surpasses the fact by acting disloyally to the party which has long nurtured and tended him, the Democrats are ready to hail him with shouting flattery, and count upon him as a new convert. And he generally "gets taken in" in time for the next election.

Already a number of measures have been introduced in the reform legislature at Lansing for large increases of official salaries, one of which included a proposition to amend the constitution so as to give Attorney-General John a larger salary. When the salaries have been raised all around, venue will the proposed retrenchment come in?

Saint Ignatiusian, Chatty, the editorial top-piece of the Ignatian Herald, has sold on Gaudi a more fitting expression than in the erection and equipment of the museum house of Grand Rapids on Tuesday last, and the dedication by the grand judge of the order as a refuge for "poor, deserving, worthy brothers, their widows and orphans." It is patriotic and thrilling illustration of the truly humane tenant, "love conquers all," and demonstrates that the proposition, "a needy brother is a sister's brother," is vital and fruitful being within the precincts of the temples of the cryptic of craft." But while the congratulations which flow in upon the brethren from every quarter are merited, they may unknowingly indulge a feeling of conscious pride at an actual achievement, it will be well to bear in mind that additional honors are ever accompanied by corresponding responsibilities. The asylum has been opened. Weary brothers will confidently accept of its offered hospitality and rest within its portals. They must meet with no niggard's welcome. The honor of the craft is pledged to their maintenance in a manner befitting their lineage and service and the entire member of the craft is personally interested as an "inspector of the work." At every congregation of masons within the jurisdiction state this issue must be taken up, and such action had as will forward the perpetuity of this noble benefice. If this is done, the institution now just completed will return, in material blessings, a ten-fold tribute to its fraternal founders. But should the withering hand of cold neglect be laid upon it, its crumbling stones and mildewed walls will find a thousand tongues to heap reproaches on the heads of the recreant members of an unworthy order.

Saint Ignatiusian, Chatty, the editorial top-piece of the Ignatian Herald, has sold on Gaudi a more fitting expression than in the erection and equipment of the museum house of Grand Rapids on Tuesday last, and the dedication by the grand judge of the order as a refuge for "poor, deserving, worthy brothers, their widows and orphans." It is patriotic and thrilling illustration of the truly humane tenant, "love conquers all," and demonstrates that the proposition, "a needy brother is a sister's brother," is vital and fruitful being within the precincts of the temples of the cryptic of craft." But while the congratulations which flow in upon the brethren from every quarter are merited, they may unknowingly indulge a feeling of conscious pride at an actual achievement, it will be well to bear in mind that additional honors are ever accompanied by corresponding responsibilities. The asylum has been opened. Weary brothers will confidently accept of its offered hospitality and rest within its portals. They must meet with no niggard's welcome. The honor of the craft is pledged to their maintenance in a manner befitting their lineage and service and the entire member of the craft is personally interested as an "inspector of the work." At every congregation of masons within the jurisdiction state this issue must be taken up, and such action had as will forward the perpetuity of this noble benefice. If this is done, the institution now just completed will return, in material blessings, a ten-fold tribute to its fraternal founders. But should the withering hand of cold neglect be laid upon it, its crumbling stones and mildewed walls will find a thousand tongues to heap reproaches on the heads of the recreant members of an unworthy order.

THE CLOTURE RULE WON.

After Much Argument Senator Aldrich Finds Gets 1 Ill Into the Harbor.

IN the Senate, on the 23d Mr. Aldrich said that the mental disease and the fact that it was the overmental pulse of the Democratic Senators to prevent any legislation unless their wishes as to certain matters were complied with, and the fact that of the minority are revolutionary he would be resolute. When Mr. Aldrich had concluded his remarks he moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the cloture rule. Mr. Hoar, in the absence of Mr. Frye, offered an order that the motion be debated two hours and a long discussion followed during which Mr. McBride argued strongly in favor of the cloture. Finally the Vice President ruled that the motion was not debatable and the order was adopted. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the cloture rule as a rule to be order, and contended the question was that the meeting before the Senate was motion to correct Tuesday's journal. The House on the motion of Mr. Dalzell, moved to approve the journal and then passed a bill to provide for a permanent census. CHAPTER XVII.

STIRRING WARNINGS—THE DEFENCE.

Ethel did not entirely recover from the effects of her night's ordeal. The loss of the night's sleep had served to unlay her nerves, and the shock of the revelation that she was envied and scarcely able to contend had been.

When she bade the family good night and retired to her room, she had hoped for to greatness of her nightly tasks; it was with a dazed feeling and perplexed mind. Nerving herself for her duty, however, as was her custom, she proceeded to the light her candle, and taking the latter opposite Dolly, passed through the wardrobe and passageway into the corridor leading.

Possessing herself of the basket of food, she contentedly ascended the stairs with the firm look a prevention that the Dolly would not be in the way, that by no accident, that by no possibility could she be surprised whose accomplished her task, passing onward, she opened the door of the cell and glanced for the place of her repast, the shelves.

As she did so, she heard distinctly a groan on the other side, which, however, rather startled than alarmed, startled her already excited nerves, such that she gave the shelves, the repasted shelves, the pot, her lantern, and ran to the door, her lantern, and was too late to stop them, that she had dropped the basket from her hand, and it had gone around the place.

As she stood, a singular, and, third minute, cry came from within.

The sound was unusual, the sounds had revolved, and the place alone appeared.

Appalled with her own carelessness, and fearing she knew not what as the result, the terrified girl, trembling, ran round only draw shut the panels with all the expedition possible, and then hastily return, the basket, fasten the door, and seek the privacy of her own chamber.

Ah, how she blamed herself for that carelessness, fearing, knowing, the more she blamed, the more she could not forgive herself for the false move.

What was now her duty?

Should she hastily seek the barrier gate, who was probably gone, and, in her alarm, leave the cell, which from the mishap, and what was to be done?

No; she would not, she would receive a wise one.

The turnout was an exceedingly pleasantly man. Such a tale, at this hour, would throw the old man into a violent passion, that might cause damage to the broken limb, and, in his rage, the girl hoped, had by this time commenced to smile.

She saw then, as once, that this nerve would cause her.

But would it be well to tell him on the morrow?

What could he do if acquainted with the natural of the thing?

He could not move from his bed. He could not, or would not, give assistance of any person he knew. It would only shatter his and prove of no avail in the end.

Perhaps, after all, the age, or what, over the creature, was would do no harm, with such a creature, and, it would handle it a little then drop, and wheeze, and, in the morning, ceremonious bored and unclose.

Certainly this must be the result.

She felt she must consider it so, and upon this, she felt, she was, in a measure, easier way, and, so, allow no harm to be.

No sleep visited her weary eyes, until long after midnight, and then it was unbroken and so unnerved by all the events of the last twenty-four hours, and yet, so anxious she prayed that all might go well, and unbroken further events from the loss of that dreadful baffle.

Rising with the alarm of the usual bell that rang to awaken the household, the girl arose, dressed, and, on review the problem that had presented itself to be worked over the night before, then made she added the question.

Should she worry Sir Reginald by telling him of the accident that had befallen Dolly, or should she not?

Before deciding positively, she resolved to wait the coming of a morning visit, and by listening, slowly out if all was going on in the house.

This resolve the industrious carried into effect.

Turning once more from her room, down the corridor, she stopped at the door close to the panel, and listened intently to hear if any one moved about the room covered with the disabled room.

All was still. Not the slightest motion was recognition, therefore, fallen motion or relieved, the relieved, feeling greatly at ease in not, the girl, resolved to say nothing of what had happened, and, trouble unknown, unknown, undergone to drive the entire circumstance from her mind.

The day passed on as usual, and when night brought her to the shelves she more more found to her satisfaction, to fence relapsed and felt that was to be fixed, all was right.

For Ethel. She little knew the fearful consequences yet to ensue from her disobedience.

The third afternoon had arrived, and nothing had transpired to lead her to apprehend the least trouble from that unfortunate occurrence.

She sat, therefore, regarded the courage she had lost, and was fast driving the idea of the circumstance from her mind.

This afternoon, Sir Reginald had engaged a wish for music, therefore she had brought her guitar, and, taking her seat and had sung several ballads for his amusement.

"I think," at length he said, interrupting the last, "that it grows cloudy. Please look out, and tell me if a shower is approaching."

Ethel arose at his bidding, and, after examining the sky, returned, saying, as she resumed her seat:

"There is, indeed. A very black cloud is rising in the west, which portends a hard shower."

"Then put aside your instrument and come to me. As I have some private business to give you in regard to a matter, to be done tonight. Are we entirely alone?"

"Certainly, Mrs. Fredon left the room to prepare my some medicinals, and your wife and niece are in the grounds," replied Ethel, somewhat troubled, at the unusual request.

"Then listen intently to my instructions. If that storm rages about, half-past nine or ten o'clock tonight, you will find Mr. Harcourt power and put in another some machinery. Are you English?"

"Oh, Sir Reginald," exclaimed the shocking listener, "please do not ask that of me."

"Shut up. You just attend to my orders, and do what I tell you to do. Never argue despite my will."

The humiliated, then, proceeded to give minute directions for the lighting of each light, and also for the movements of the frightful and hideous image there mentioned.

At its conclusion he remarked:

"Do you think you understand every particular of the work I now require to do?"

"I do," replied Ethel; "but, sir, my soul revolts at the thought of being a conspirator in a wicked deception, and I beg you to excuse me from undertaking it."

"Who cares what you think about it? Your duty is to obey, and, if you hesitate, shall, so do not dare to utter another word against it."

So liberated, I have faithfully performed your wishes in regard to feeding the animal, whose life, you value so highly, hoping that, by so doing, I may be of gives the base of God's creatures a little comfort. I have never before thought of striving to impose upon the credulity of the unfortunate creature.

That, I tell you is my business and not yours. I was the angry reply. "You are force simply to do what I tell you, and not to think about and you for follow up."

"I know that I am in your power, and, therefore, I dare not refuse to your wishes and judgment. Sir Reginald, I know that you are a man of strong, and of an overwear you in early life, and, I know, that you have been accustomed for twenty-five years, silence that, and, I know, that you have been accustomed to my. Perhaps, then, be satisfied, and, I know, that you."

"I tell you I will not," replied the laconic, fully perplexed, "I know, that I do not see that your obstinacy is throwing away a fortune, and, that, I know, that I mean?" I command you to obey my orders, and, I know, that I have not to leave my house this night, even though a storm, and, I know, that I, I know, that, I know, that, I know, that

KING KALAKAUA DEAD.

THE HAWAIIAN KING BREATHES HIS LAST IN SAN FRANCISCO.

His Journey to This Country in Search of Health Results in Death—A Trip a Temporary Improvement, and the Stricken Polynesian Expires Before He Is Able to Reach His Native Shores.

San Francisco dispatch:

King Kalakaua died here this afternoon after a day and a half of hopeless coma, which all the forces of an unusually strong man rallied to resist death. He lay through the early morning hours in a semi-conscious state, occasionally rousing to recognize what was said to him. He seemed to improve a little after noon, but about 2 o'clock a relapse occurred and a report go out that he was dead. The news was soon known at the hotel office and bulletins rushed out, but some time intelligence was denied by the physicians. They kept the King alive by hypodermic injections of the doctors constantly directed. He would have died early last evening, except for liberal hypodermic injections of stimulants.

The physicians at the end were simple, and will be gracefully settled. Kalakaua succeeded Lunalilo, the last of the Kamehamaha dynasty. When Kalakaua was elected he named as his successor Princess Liliuokalani, his sister, who is married to a American, named John Dominis. She is now Regent, having been appointed such by her brother. Kalakaua called on his visit to Washington, in which he did not have to do is to take the oath of office and proceed to Honolulu.

Kalakaua I., the deceased King of the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, is a descendant of Kamehameha, a native chieftain who conquered the group and made them a kingdom. He was born in 1836. After the death of his predecessor, Lunalilo, he was elected to succeed, in preference to Queen Emma, the widow of Kamehameha IV., who was the last of his wife, the late Queen Kapiolani, who died in June last. The reign of Kalakaua's reign was characterized by a large increase in commerce and wealth, and he supported the Japanese capital in the Hiogoan. Through the immigration of Portuguese, the country early encouraged to (on the country) and the Japanese, the Chinese, the Kanakas, and developed to, with Kalakaua visited all in a country and other state here. The reciprocity treaty with the United States, which gave the Hawaiian product free entry, proved to be very potent in the reign Kalakaua, and the sugar plantations were filled with people for thousands and. Thousands of Japanese came and whom are almost entirely without fail in their homes.

The American Sandwiches have been discussed in a number article in Harper's Magazine lodging, and the undersigned review of a very age are more than fifty to be repeated.

R. G. DUN & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Time for the situation and prospect may be changed by the passage of a Free-Coinage bill by the Senate to no yet nearly a matter of conjecture. Reports of the state of business in the country are more cheerful, however, some to the extent of a decided improvement in the volume of business, greater money markets, and a more cheering outlook. The reports of merchandise sales are more satisfactory, and the prices of staples show a tendency to advance, which, if it continues, will be a great help to the country, for it will be the first time in many years, perhaps, that the farmer has had a profit in his crop. The prospect is that the acreage of cotton, broadcloth, and other textile, and perhaps in the number were almost unprecedented. Hence the prospect of a good crop of cotton, if it does not vary large in size of the decline in movement of breadstuffs which has been so marked for a week or two, while wheat is at a price which

DEATH CLOSES A NOTABLE NEW YORK BANQUET.

Secretary Windom Suddenly Expires Instant Enthusiastic Success. A Notable Life Sketch—Gen. Hunt Crowns the Cup—Sketch of the Deceased Statesman.

NEW YORK, Dispatch.

The Honorable William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury, died at 10 o'clock at the banquet hall at Delmonico's given in his honor. He was the guest of the Merchants' Club, and had just finished his speech, when he was seized with the pain which ended his life. He had been in good health and spirits all the day, and was in the best of humor at the banquet. He had taken his seat at the table with the other guests, and was chatting with his neighbors when he was stricken down. He had just finished his speech, and was in the act of the toast of the night, and the last thing he said was that he was the guest of the evening. He spoke for a few minutes, and then sat down. He was then seized with the pain which ended his life

An unfriendly foal has turned the whole crop of alfalfa seed in South eastern California. Of course the Mc-Kinley bill was to blame.

As Mr. Parnell is expected to arrive in this country before St. Patrick's day, we should probably have a full explanation from him on top of all that the newspapers have said. It will be a curious thing to note his explanation among the friends of Ireland over here.

Those citizens of the United States who have been raising such a howling about excessive taxation and increased revenues should try life in the Sandwich Islands awhile. The government under the recent king cost the people $123 per capita per annum, while the highest estimate ever put upon our's is about four dollars per capita.

Representative Cook proposes that members of the legislature shall be paid $1,000 and traveling expenses per term of the. He deftly places the figure at $500 per annum, but as there is a session of the legislature only once in two years, the entire amount paid for the second year of the legislative term would be "velvet." Mr. Cook's plan would give the legislature $10 per day, assuming the average duration of the legislative session to be 100 legislative or working days. The present compensation is $3 per day and mileage during the session. Thus do retrenchment" and "reform" move lovely—especially "retrenchment."

The Helena (Montana) Journal has this: The elegant masonic home, built by Michigan Masons at Grand Rapids and dedicated recently, cost $68,000. It will be for the accommodation of destitute Masons, their widows and children. A census taken connected with its opening at that time of the very first inmates to take advantage of its shelter will be a man who ten years ago first started the project and did much to make it a success. Five years ago he was able bodied, rugged and prosperous; today he is a paralytic, and dependent upon the fraternity for the ordinary necessaries of life. This is a lesson in charity."

It is the Democrats claim, the passage of the Lodge bill would be the death knell of the Republican party, why is it they are making such strenuous efforts to defeat the bill? And why do they rejoice over every successful effort to obstruct its passage? One would think they would want to passing the bill, if they thought it would injure the Republican party, but they don't. The season is this: they know that under a law that would secure a free and fair expression of the voice of the legal electors of the United States the Democratic party would have no hopes of success. The only hope of that party is in buldozing and intimidating in the South and fraudulent manipulation and rape of the ballot box in the North.

The apportionment bill passed the Senate, but as it passed the House, though several amendments were offered, but secured a majority vote if they force. The bill was passed by a strict party vote, 57 yeas and 28 nays. The bill provides that after March 4, 1893, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 356 and gives the following States retain the present representation: Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia and Wyoming. Each of the following States gains one additional member: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Oregon, Washington, and Wisconsin. Two additional members are given to Illinois, Minnesota, Pennsylvania and Texas. Three additional members are given to Nebraska. Twenty-six of the forty-five States retain their present representation. Thirteen States each gain one additional member. Four States each gain two additional members, and one state gains three. The average increase over the present membership of the House is twenty-four. No State loses any part of its present membership.

SHE LED HIM ON.

BY CLINTON WALLACE.

From the crowd and the roaring of the ball-room
I turned to the quiet of night,
Where the diamonds and shine of a wanton gaiety
Were hidden in shadows and gloom.
Of the lights with its music and its flowers,
Its laughter, its jest and its wine,
I turned to the night and the stillness
Of the moonlit and star-lighted vine.

I turned to the night and the stillness,
Where no sound of the revel came,
Where the moon-light and shadow lay softly
Upon the vine-covered frame.
Half tired am I, therefore that sun, so gracious
To me, for all we have endured you Either. We must, I think, be worth your body, worse with love's chosen for you.
I do not worship at those temples you speak
Most sons four, much, here at your feet.
Either will I ever be sorry when I leave
Who four hours to consent your most lovely
Lady, and let me be your knight.
All the earth did not shake because you
Most fair? Smile! what I claim you now.
PANDYNE.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXVII.—Continued.

Then a sudden storm was raging, and the wind was blowing a gale, and it was dark as Erebus, and the rain was pouring down in torrents, and the thunder was crashing and the lightning was flashing, and the sea was roaring and dashing and foaming, and the ship was tossing and pitching and rolling, and I was terrified, and I was sick, and I was dizzy, and I was giddy, and I was—

"Yes, yes, I understand," interrupted the Doctor, with a shudder at the picture thus presented to his imagination. "It must be very trying to a person of your temperament to be—to be—to be—"

"Sick, you mean," said Mr. Bunsby, with a smile of pity for the Doctor's evident ignorance of the sea. "Well, I was sick, and I was very sick, and I was very, very sick, and I was very, very, very sick, and I was very, very, very, very sick —East Jordan Enterprise, Charlevoix is going to have a railroad and the Enterprise is glad of it. For if ever a town earned one she has. Her people have shown what can be done in a community where there is a united and unstinted effort in accomplish something. There are places we not of where these two qualities are not always extensively apparent—at the same time at least. We wish Charlevoix people begin to look around among themselves to see where the lay pointing. By this time Charlevoix should clearly see, believe they must give a large share of home to their papers, which are the mouthpieces, pioneers, philanthropists and out of season, whatever be the case, any pressed.

—The Charlevoix High School library has purchased a large number of useful and valuable books. The high school has a set of Irving's Collected Works, set of Indian Age Four Hundred, and about fifteen bound volumes of miscellaneous works. The library and textbook room is half out of binding. The new books are endorsed and delivery of the English Classics which is paper binding, has commenced. About $10 has been spent in pictures and frames. There is still left over $10 for future use. The library now has about 100 bound volumes of standard works, and 100 pamphlets for literary study. All this is from the money earned from reserve additions to nearly all from the entertainment of Dec. 17th. It is a good showing, and well creditable to Superintendent, staff and school.

—Grand Traverse Herald: Rev. C. Thompson, the well known Art. Missionary, and old time abolitionist, and the history of Underground R. R. and adventures in the border wars in his efforts to assist runaway slaves in the ending days before the war, read like a romance to the young people of the last generation, and was a resident of Grand Traverse so many years, during its early days of settlement, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Slaw and other friends here for a week or so past. Mr. and Mrs. Hannah and Mrs. Hannah, will leave about the 10th for an extended trip through the South and Western and perhaps to Cuba, and will be good company for the cranks.

AN INDIAN LEGEND.

The Tradition Concerning Sleeping Bear Point and the Manitou Islands.

The look now of the Indians of Michigan is almost a thing of the past, but few of their legends being preserved at the present time. To be sure, there are a few of the old stories, whose locks have been whitened by the receding frosts of many winters, who preserve a few of the teachings of their tribes. Such a man is Wiwin-ga-gawah, an aged Indian whose large proportions gave him the name mentioned, which translated into English, means great. Being a communicative man he need a few years ago be relapsed one of his tribal traditions, concerning the Manitou Islands and Sleeping Bear Point. He said that many years ago, before the primeval woods of Michigan and Wisconsin had been invaded by the pathfinders white men, the still remains of the Indians were possessed of superhuman and that the medicine men of the tribes were able to talk with them.

Once upon a time a huge sea-bear was compelled to desert the shores of Wisconsin and with her two cubs take to the waters of Michigan, the great lake, on account of the fires that were raging in the wilderness. The bear was so exhausted that the mother could not swim to reach the Wisconsin shore, but manage to land on the island of Michigan. Where upon she lay down to lick the two cubs back from exhaustion and soon departed. The old bear swam about the pier for hours, for her mate was not with. Finally she was compelled to take to the shore, leaving behind the cubs, a large land and sea bear to sleep. The cubs crept sleeping Bear Point, and from that day to this, the spirit of the old bear has remained on that bluff, and from the place where back the two cubs flew gradually arose two mountains, one in the Northern south Michigan, as a means to the Grandfather, the Ottawa, spirit mounds. The spirits of the cubs are supposed to reside in the islands, and that of the mother bear keeps a watchful watch over the bear. Such is the Indian legend of the Sleeping Bear and the Manitou Islands.

—It is no secret that following extensive operations in Stockton Harbor will be entered, with double in connection capacity. And we find reliable parties who are interested in the contemplated connection between Stockton and Charlevoix it will be practicably a fixed fact in a reasonable time. The time is most here when a distance of six miles will not count in such matters.

—The Michigan Shaved shingles are beginning to stack up within reach for the summer run, and will be on a cutting up season on an extensive scale. The shaved shingles last everyone who produces and a firmly established and rapidly market up. The Pennsylvania, in a recent issue, says: "Shaved cedar shingles are meeting with a ready sale, and give excellent satisfaction."

—We don't often give delinquent subscribers in these columns, but the survivors at this season seeing seven every dollar that is its due, generally improvement and pay up. Such is the paper this spring, and we must have what is due us to pay for what we get. Dollar or two is an individual don't amount to much, but about $1,200 makes a good deal of job. Come now, where up with the cash.

—Sawyer Wanted has introduced a bill to obtain another circuit which will remain in the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet, Manitowoc and Mackinac. The counties named will make a fine Democratic district, and we pray to work, parenthetically, that Charlevoix, or Petoskey, would make a good county judge. Of course the two final have no connection, you know, but we just happened to think of it.

—Don't squabble over cedar logs, for it happens to be in a swamp, it will have a good chance to rot. Wait in a year that will pull many a fine one through financial mud holes. Likewise keep an eye on your hemlock, bark, and all, its value will rise. And your hardwood timber, don't squander it, it will be worth a pocket full of money one of these days, and then you will look back and think of the scarcows of it you have burned in the labour. Hardwood, ties, and sawlogs, all represent increasing value. Don't waste them.

—Grand Rapids Democrat: C. H. Lamb, of Chicago, who had a claim on the Rock, judgment against him in C. & E. H. R., which the C. & W. M. purchased, was in the city yesterday, and amicably settled the matter with the C. & W. M. The road's ownership of the judgment is cancelled, and as the judgment represents the franchise and all there is of the detours D. G. & E. road, there is little, if any, doubt that the line will be extended from Traverse City to Charlevoix, at least, and probably to Petoskey, before the snow flies next winter.

—The Enterprise Manufacturing Co. have repaired up the Smithson saw mill, and are putting it in at their plant in this village. They have also added another lathe to their factory. They have plenty of power, and will make things lively this summer.

—The "Temple of Fame," given under the auspices of the Congregational church at Lewis Grand Opera House Saturday evening last, called out a fine audience. The production illustrates a grand truth. It presents in review in passing vision, the grandeur, glory and virtue of the world's history, and then, in the "Temple of Fame" the goddess places the crown upon the fair head of a mother. The stage picture is attractive, and the music and elocution are well selected and well placed. By request it will be repeated to-night. It is well worth attending.

—Dr. LePere had an adventure Sunday night, with a burglar. The Doctor and his wife sat in their pleasant sitting room the after lit o'clock, when they heard a noise out in the office. The Doctor pulled his six feet of human nature together and made a break for the noise. As he entered the office the stranger was passing hastily out the front door. The Doctor ran back and secured his gun and gave the bad man a lively chase up the street toward the park. Back went gave out after running a block, so he returned to his office to find nothing missing.

—Prof. Alexander Winchell, of Ann Arbor, is said to be dying. Old settlers of Grand Traverse remember Prof. Winchell well. Back in 1869 he was state geologist, and made a survey of Grand Traverse, the report of which has done much to settle the region. Soil and climate entered largely into the report, and the Pine Lake region was specially favored. The other interviewed Prof. Winchell in his tent on the beach near the mouth of the river, in the summer of 1869 or '70, and his words of prophecy concerning this region, were an inspiration to us for many years after.

—To be candid with you, Mr. Enterprise, the Sentinel hopes to see the Ward railroad built, and built to the head of South Arm. The Sentinel, 20 years ago labored for the work of Charlevoix harbor improvement, and two years later advocated the deepening of the upper cut. These two improvements combined were what made East Jordan what it is. Why cannot the Enterprise and East Jordan people concede honor where it is due. The Sentinel professes to be broad enough to desire the prosperity of every section of Charlevoix county. We ask, if David Ward moves out East Jordan in his railroad scheme, he will be a very foolish man. But he will not do it.

—Milwaukee Wisconsin: Capt. Tom Smith, of the tug J. H. Martin, of Charlevoix, is a unique character in his way, and it is said of him that nothing was ever known to ruffle the serenity of his temper. A number of years ago he was master of the small schooner Sea Gem. One night, while making the run from Milwaukee to Charlevoix, the schooner was caught in a terrible squall. The mate called to Tom several times to come on deck, but he remained in the cabin patiently sawing away on an old cracked fiddle, in a vain attempt to whose out a new tune. Finally the schooners canvas began to blow away, and the mate took back down the companion way and shouted: "For God's sake, Captain, come on deck! The schooner is going straight to hell!" "Is she going by the way of Charlevoix?" drawled the Captain. "I s'pose so," replied the mate, "all right then, I'll get off there," and he began sawing away again. A few years ago Capt. Smith bought the old tug, and he is still on the beach at Gill's Pier. After working two or three years on her she went to dissolve better to pull get her off. He had been working for three months with his tug and a big gang of men to get her pulled over one day by his partner, who inquired if he had pulled on her yet. "Yes, we have pulled her a pull or two," said Tom in his mild, deliberate way. "Have you moved her any?" "Yes, we moved her a little some." "How much do you suppose you have moved her?" Tom shut one eye, squinted a stream of amber fluid over the rail, and said, "I'm not just sure, but I think about a sixteenth of an inch."

—Col. J. Monroe Rogers, of the Michigan military academy, writes from Orchard Lake, Mich. "In firing an eight-inch mortar recently we were successful in making an instantaneous photograph of the same, catching the shell about 10 feet from the mouth of the mortar." The view of the cannon-ball is clear.

A LOVER'S EVENING PRAYER.

BY CHARLES G. HALPINE.

O, God! I love her; keep her safe.
Although it be Virtue all—she will
That I may never see her more
Yet keep her safe I pray Thee still!

O, shield her from all evil! while
And keep her pure to bless within Pity me too, and let me love her too,
But keep her from all harm and sin.

Let angels watch around her bed
Nor fear to her with thousands fast planted,
Let angels watch around her bed
And give her peace and angel dreams.

IF

BY SARAH C. WRIGHT.

If I were an artist I would paint
A rose or lily, a dove or tree.
With a hidden something, then a saint—
And that hidden something be.

If I were an artist I would know
Just what to paint to make people feel
To bring out all the wonderful glow
In those eyes that I see at meal.

If I were an artist I would give
A beauty and a comfort to all,
In the long years that I may live
In which, and love, we may not call.

If I were an artist I would place
Above each picture, a name so dear
That one can never, never, forget it
Only my dearest, my own, my love.

whirled around, and I know by the cry he gave that he had it."

"What! fool?" whispered the escaped being before her as he gave her arm such a fearful wrench that it almost broke the elbow. "What of my slight out of my house little house? You have ruined me with your ruined carelessness! Not another night shall you share my house this night!"

There seemed to be no way—this time—to resist. But fortunately, with a wrench of her arm, she had freed herself, nearly exhausted, she had darted back, and as the blow descended on empty air.

Without another look at the man before her the poor young girl ran from his presence, and dragging herself back to her room, fastened herself in, when she sought to prepare for her departure. With her arms hanging motionless by her side, and nearly wild with pain, she opened her trunks and throwing her valuables much as well as she could, with one hand, she hurled them in, and dropped the lot into her pocket.

Fearing the worst (and it was) she put the package of papers her aunt had given her with her jewels safely in her pocket, that she might on return of their owner. The hastily packed comb, brushes, and night apparel in a handkerchief, she passed by.

Advantage to her window, she found that a train was still laden, and that darkness was even then over the earth.

Throwing her waterproof over her shoulders, with her hat drawn over her hat, she opened her door and glided down the stairs, and out of the front entrance, fortunately without being seen by any of the family.

As she has passed the sick man's room, she knew he was still there, and she noticed little that they had gone to his bedroom. He probably would be interested in his by his passionate friend.

While she hurried on, the lights and noise in the house faded away as she sped on.

Then with a desired ship she passed down the quay.

ONE THING LACKING.

DR. TALMAGE CONTINUES HIS EVANGELISTIC SERMONS.

The Great Array of Good Things as Arranged Congregation Can Share It. Yet You Many Lack That Which is Best of All.

Dr. Talmage's text was taken from Mark 10:21, "One thing lacketh thou."

The young man of the text was a splendid image. We like to see him at the first glance. He was amiable and frank and earnest and educated and refined and respectable and moral, and yet he was not a Christian. Jesus Christ addresses him in the words that I have read to you. "One thing thou lackest." I suppose that text was no more appropriate to the young man of whom I have spoken than it is appropriate to a great many people of people in this audience. There are many things in which you are not lacking. For instance, you are not lacking in a good name. It is perhaps more than an hour ago that you closed the door of your house, and you lay down well fastened, of one of the best homes in this city. You are not lacking in a good home. Perhaps you are lacking in the ability to keep your returning footsteps, will rush to the door to meet you, and in long winter evenings the children at the stand with their lessons, the wife plying the needle and you reading the book of the day, and you feel that you have a good home.

Neither are you lacking in the elements and conveniences of life. You have a good table, good clothing, good fire, and good society. You have a good business, and you are better stocked at the wedding than when I married you. You are not lacking in health. If I am well enough to other occupations I am well enough to preach. I never ever reckoned I may be greater or personal health than I have. You are not lacking in concerning and assemblages. I shall be able to address you. You are not lacking in sympathy. Many weep and you understand the proprietors of crying. Life and joy are not in your lot.

Neither are you lacking in worldly wealth. You have enough to live on, and as you would be to leave, but you have enough to live on. Perhaps you say that they have no income, or your income is less than it was, or it is what falsehood. You have had a fortune, and you have lost it in some way, sources, which is just the same thing, for you have lost it. You have had to be careful, as by a competence of wealth, and you have had to be careful, as by a fortune. You have had to be careful, as by a fortune. You have had to be careful, as by a fortune. You

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Republican county convention for the county of Charlevoix, will be held at Boyne City, on Friday, February 27th, 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following offices, viz: Clerk, Register of Deeds, Treasurer, Prosecuting Attorney, Circuit Court Commissioner, Coroner, and Surveyor, and for such other business as may properly come before the convention.

The basis of representation in said convention will be as follows, viz:

Each township is entitled to one delegate for every twenty votes cast for Secretary of State at the election in 1888, and one additional delegate for a majority of twenty votes or more.

Dated this 17 day of January, A. D. 1891.

GEORGE L. COLBETH,
JAMES A. BENHAM,
Chairmen.

James G. Blaine is the greatest statesman in America at the present day.

Chief Cull, who succeeds Sitting Bull in the head of the Sioux nation, led the Indians in the battle that brought defeat and death to Custer.

The legislature has passed the bill allowing Judges of Probate to appoint Superintendents of the poor, when a vacancy occurs, to hold since until the next meeting of the board of supervisors.

"Beautiful snow, it can do no wrong." But it has in some ways run up against Edison and must suffer the penalty. He is now engaged upon an invention in the shape of an electric and sunlight reflector which shall melt the snow as fast as it falls. There has been snow for him to experiment upon in New York—rather more than he wanted. What is needed more than a snow melter is a snow squelcher for the whole country.

According to an announcement of the school laws of the state of Michigan, children suffering from consumption or chronic catarrh must be excluded from public schools. The circumstance is interesting as a first step toward the public recognition of a most important truth, the fact, namely, that the disorders of the respiratory organs can be propagated by direct contagion, and that the atmosphere of a consumptive's sick room unless constantly ventilated, is sure to become a virulent living poison.

The First Reciprocity Treaty Under the Republican Policy.

The national Republican administration is already able to show to the country the fruits of its reciprocity policy, which on its incorporation into the laws of our country was opposed by every Democrat in both Houses of Congress. The people will not forget this mighty fact. Secretary Blaine has already negotiated a reciprocity treaty with Brazil, which goes into effect on the 1st of April, 1891, and which President Harrison announces in his proclamation to the nation and the world. It is a magnificent step in the right direction, and the earnestness of the Democratic leaders when they recorded themselves against this wise and beneficiaal policy, can now be thoroughly understood by the people.

The President thus proclaims the articles of our own production which are to be admitted free into the United States of Brazil, a country nearly as large as our own, with a population already of 12,000,000, and which will soon be augmented to 25,000,000. Americans who desire increased trade with foreign countries, read this schedule:

Wheat, wheat flour, corn or maize, and the manufacture thereof, including corn meal and starch; rye, rye flour; buckwheat flour, and barley; potatoes, beans and peas, lay and oats; pork, salt, and lardcuing pickled pork and bacon, except hams, fish, salted, dried or pickled; cotton seed oil; coal, anthracite and bituminous; resin, tar, pitch and turpentine; agricultural tools, implements and machinery, including stationary and portable engines, and all machinery for manufacturing and industrial purposes, except sewing machines, instruments and books for the arts and sciences; railway construction material and equipment.

The President further proclaims that Brazil has agreed to make a reduction of 25 per cent in her duties upon the following articles of American production:

Lard and substitutes therefor; bacon, hams, butter and cheese, canned and preserved meats, fish, fruit and vegetables; manufactures of cotton, including cotton clothing; manufactures of iron and steele, single or mixed, not included in the foregoing; fire apparatus; leather and the manufactures thereof, except boots and shoes; lumber, timber and the manufacture of wood, including cooperage, furniture of all kinds, wagons, carts and carriages; manufactures of rubber.

Our present exports to Brazil amount to only $9,000,000 per annum, whereas we pay her $65,000,000 for sugar, coffee, hides, rubber, etc. Just it is now supposed that our exports to Brazil during the next two or three years will annually aggregate at least $25,000,000. The articles on which duties are reduced, and which must be of American manufacture, will enable our merchants to undersell in the Brazilian markets many articles of merchandise which are now imported from England, France and Germany.

Northern Michigan News.

Charles Burmeister, of Frankfort, is in Berlin, undergoing the Koch treatment for consumption.

Bellaire Bonus: D. U. & E. and G. & W. M. stockholders and owners will meet at Charlevoix March 4 to inaugurate an era of prosperity for this region.

Geo. W. Albrecht, formerly of Bellaire, but now of Middlesboro, Ky., is again in the newspaper business, being one of the proprietors of the daily Mining Journal of that city.

Elk Rapids Progress. A prominent official of the C. & W. M. told us on the train when near Lansing several weeks ago, that the road would be into Elk Rapids next summer with an fall.

There are some good-sized families in Leelanaw County, samuel Gaginau, of Northport, is the father of twenty-three children, his brother George has twenty-four, and Napoleon Dautes, of Leland, is a good third with seventeen.

The Manistee & Northern railroad is a freak. The road is 65 miles long and it was built and equipped entirely by private capital, and to-day there is no mortgage upon it, not a cent in stock has ever been sold on it and not a bond has been issued. It is probably the only road in the United States which can make a similar showing.

Owen's Village Cor. Sunjamer: One of the Indians that returned home Saturday, feeling the fire water trouble down his brain, and with a minimum of mind, dropped into one of our business houses on Monday and walking up to a dry good cutter had down a nickel with the remark, "you me one tobacco." He took it for a photograph.

Harbor Springs Republican: The last small wash line related here from Beaver Island since the list, arrived yesterday morning via Cross Village. It was brought over the on dog sleighs.—Capt. Vandenhoef and Capt. Walter Cysler started for Detroit yesterday morning on a pleasure trip. It is reported that they have gone to purchase another steam boat.

Petoskey Record: The Charlevoix SENTINEL fairly feels over in the exuberance of its editor's delight over the national developments of the past fortnight. Willard has taken his share of rousing because or the failure of the D. U. & E. and now he is satisfied in crowing lustily. "" nine block paid off the outstanding orders in Charlevoix and vicinity on Saturday, amounting to $5,500, and Wm Alden Smith, the attorney of the C. & W. M. R. R. met the council of Charlevoix and gave them the assurance that the road would be built inside of 12 months. The council promised to the U. & W. M. the action of a former council in voting $25,000.00 bridge bonds to the D. U. & E. road. The SENTINEL is cock sure that the whistle of the locomotive will waken the echoes in the sand hills, inside of a year.—Mrs. Kate Smith left on the Sunday night train for Battle Creek where her daughter, Mrs. Jessie McGibeny lies sick. We understand Mrs. McGibeny is getting better, and her friends here will hope for her entire and speedy recovery.

Bay City Indian Enterprise: D. C. Jacobs, of Detroit, yesterday returned from Chicago Friday bringing Miss Maud who is improving, and Mrs. Magill, who will attend here.—Chas. F. Dixon, on his return to England next fall will take back with him specimens of axes, cant hooks, pens, fishing tackle and innumerable other articles commonly seen here. We suggest that he prepare a good lecture, and think that if he would appear on the platform in a full suit of machinaws, with tall stockings, rubbers, red sash, and a two foot "lumberman's pride" plug of tobacco in his hip pocket, and intersperse his lecture with appropriate side selections in the form of a "jig" or a taking reel.—Mr. H. T. Harbour, who for the past year has had charge of the land department of the Kansas & Texas Co. alone at this place, has sent in his resignation. Mr. Harbour will go to Bradford, Pa., where he will become business manager of the Star Dining Co., of that city. During his stay here he has made many friends who regret to have him leave. Huntington, (Ark.) Herald.—A hand saw export from Marinette, Wis., is giving the final touches to the hand saw machinery in the East Jordan Lumber Co.'s mill. It will start up Monday.

One of the state officers has four members of his family, son's and daughters in the four most important places under him. Others are pouring the places in their gift with family barnacles. Such nepotism is disgraceful enough, but they know this may be the last chance so they line up at the trough in family groups. The list is now offered to supply family register transplanted into official books.

MISSING LINKS.

Some sixty convertsons were added on the third through Dowie at Zion, Illinois.

Twenty lands in Boston and Lynn, population 70, contained a higher proportion than Iowa.

A Galveston, Tex., man had a whim which he claims is one hundred and ten years old, and has been carrying it about.

Condensed skunks in Utah, and there is a prospect that Connecticut Yankees will manufacture a small proportion of them.

An association of Dunkinsville housewives will consider hereafter the propriety of the pressed cantaloupe, the other fellow's pie, and the hole worn in the pump, very unlikely to be mended while the pump is in commission, the sermon of the minister, with every rail fence in the county, the neighbor's husband who tried to whipped it would be known as a dead rail. The copper wire that pulled in the work in quite expensive and has caused an important mess in the music our good.

RELIC OF A PAST GENERATION.

The Oldest Inhabitant of Illinois Raised Here a Year Ago.

"The oldest inhabitant of Illinois" died, who had been holding a lot of curiosities in the shape of an old and mouldering Indian child, mummied in the ancient fashion of the Indians, and a year ago a correspondent of the Chicago Times, while in Jacksonville, Brockton was arranging a study thesis of the Indian race, and the Indian child mummied, set something hard to work. The Indian child had been lying out of doors, and was in a state of preservation, nothing but a pair of boots and a skin coat.

A tree planting society has been formed in Brooklyn, which intended from seedlings in shading colors of the trifolium family, and in the spring, the city and suburbs will be dotted with clumps of trees in green and gold.

Here are growing on a farm in San Antonio, Cal., two large by clover heads, which are the same. They grew not far in bloom, and a very large spread of clover, and the clover heads are so large it is thought they will yield 1,000 pounds of fruit each.

Samuel Brannon was caught in some of his own bear traps in Dalhoff Lake, Colorado, and his dog and horse were stared to death. Postmaster Boyce, deceased, being, however, as Sound was about to turn from anger and released him from his unfortunate predicament.

A man died in St. Paul the other day leaving a fortune of $1,000,000. The deceased was division agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, and he was well known to Sioux City people. The man died from the effects of a dose of Pyrene, a fire extinguisher, which he had used on his office, and which, it is supposed, he had inhaled in the dark. The deceased was 45 years of age, and left a wife and family.

Hermann Zietzing, now in London, expresses desire to be called up in a back and shipped to New York. He has practiced somnolency in that city and back. He comes inside the journey between Vienna and Paris. In a truck and has not consented into any between Berlin and London, also in a truck.

Gie Nee, a Chinese merchant of Riverside, Cal., is about to return to China to secure himself a wife and in order to do so he will have to leave the country. He has drawn up a certificate setting forth who he is and including a photograph pasted on the same, and has had the African county officials sign the document.

A three horse drive with a snake was taken recently in Jersey, on Saturday. On getting out of her carriage she moved the cushions to find something which had slipped down, and to her horror discovered a large coiled snake underneath. Had not the creature been in a benumbed condition she could not have escaped alive.

Miss Blossom of Spokane, queen of Dimmopoi, consumes sixty cigarettes every day, in her smoking, and she has a jar of gum arabic, with which she pulses the regular shorts of tobacco together, thus making the finest cigarettes twice as long as the ordinary article. She uses the choicest brands of Turkish tobacco, and rolls them all herself.

An innovation in the method of handling green fruit at the port of New York is about to be put into practice. The new arrangement consists of a steam-hoisted wheel. In the past fruit has been hurled on the wharf without regard to the weather, and when the temperature ranged below the freezing point great damage resulted. The hoisted wheel will be of by 184 feet in dimensions.

Minister Phelps says English is the language in diplomatic circles in Berlin. The Kaiser, Chancellor Capriti and all the high officials, as well as society people, speak English, and show much preference for it than it would be imagineous to insist upon German. On occasion of visits to the capitals of England and Germany the Kaiser, Bismarck and other prominent people of English and American books.

An amusing complaint has come before an English local board. A chimney sweeper complained that people in the town deprived him of a living by sweeping their own chimneys. These mothers use to get up early and set fire to their chimneys. As complainant said a fortnight, he considered the board ought not to allow this kind of thing to continue. The board promised to consider the complaint.

No objection was raised to the marriage of a young Louisville couple, yet, for the sake of romance, they executed a sensational elopement. They met by appointment at 3 o'clock in the morning and boarded a locomotive for a country town. There they obtained license and were quietly made one. They returned, to the city, where the bride received her parents and introduced her new husband.

Dr. Bate, of the Lone Wood, and young on Yazoo Creek, Miss., is a man of 105 years of age. He is now in good health and can walk without assistance. He has been a hard drinker and smoker all his life. He says he attributes his long life to the fact that he never worked.

A Kansas man, who claims to have discovered a remedy for the liquor habit, proposes to place it on the market. He says it is a vegetable compound, and that he has taken it himself for the past two years, and has not touched a drop of liquor during that time. He says he has tried it on his friends, and it has proved a complete success in every instance.

INDUSTRIOUS CONGRESSMEN.

Remarks Made While Doing Work at it Worth Noting.

In the House on the 6th, it was refreshing that during the remainder of the session the hours of meeting would be at 10 o'clock instead of 11 as at present. Representatives of Ohio, reputing a resolution for the prolonged adjournment of the election counts decided by the Fifty-first Congress, which was adopted, and the House went into committee of the whole on the bill for the relief of Ellen M. Dana. The speaker, with the consent of the committee, rule, 111 appropriations for purchases for the year ending June 30, 1891, for fees and expenses of examining surgeons for pensions, and for medical examination of pensioners, and for the payment of such examiners, which was discussed at length, the question on agreeing to the committee amendment was taken, and the committee rose and reported the bill to the house, when the previous question was ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to the exclusion of a motion to recommit, and the amendments were adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. Mills (Tex.) moved to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out the provisions relating to the examination of pensioners by examining surgeons, and on this motion he demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and the motion to recommit was lost, yeas 90, nays 142, not voting 99. The question then recurring on the passage of the bill, it was passed, yeas 142, nays 90, not voting 99. Mr. Springer (Ill.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the relief of the widows of ex-Speaker Randall and Speaker Carlisle, and on this motion he demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and the motion was lost, yeas 138, nays 90, not voting 99. DEAD!

Gen. Sherman and Admiral Porter Join the Silent Majority.

While we were reading the published bulletins from the sick-bed of Gen. Sherman, the sad news came that Admiral David D. Porter, a naval hero of the late war, had crossed the river.

And now the last great hero of that great war follows his comrade behind the veil. General William Tecumseh Sherman died Saturday night, after a comparatively brief illness, of erysipelas and pneumonia. But these grand old warriors will live in the hearts of their countrymen.

From Beaver Island

Jan. 25. January came in with a big snowstorm and cold weather. We had fine skating all around for a while, but a south wester broke it up, and our hopes of a mail van ended like a June frost; though, to keep up appearances, Johnson sent Lightning westward with the mail, but returned the same day. At this writing, the farther is clear of ice to a point inside of McCann's dock.

The death of Mrs. Wm. Boyle, on Tuesday last, cast a gloom over the entire community. She was buried yesterday, the funeral being largely attended. She leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss. She was respected by all.

We are getting anxious for a mail, and the carriers are getting ready to start out.

Sunstan, light-keeper on this Island, is wintering here with his family. Being an expert trapper, he has caught ten foxes up to date.

Everything betokens an early opening of navigation.

Good crossing on the ice to Garden Island: a dance there tonight, at John Vincent's.

Feb. 3. The party that went over to John Vincent's dance, did not return until yesterday. The ice broke up and left them there. They came on foot across the ice, and report a jolly time at the Hotel de Vincent. They had four dances and lots of fun.

Died, Jan. 20, Bridget, wife of Frank Gallagher, of Lisoch. She was nearly blind for a long time, and was 76 years of age.

There is lots of ice in sight, and we hope soon to get a mail. Byron & Co. commenced putting up ice last week.

We have had more snow than is agreeable, and last night is the coldest we have had.

A son of John Gillespie was badly injured last week by being thrown from a load of cedar logs. The binding-chain broke and the load fell on him. He was found unconscious and rescued by another teamster.

They exercise their fast nags on the ice in the harbor. John McCann's gelding is the speediest of the lot.

Feb. 9. Very cold last night. Clear water within one-third of the distance at Capt. Bonner's last Monday night, another next Monday night as Hugh Conahan's. So we go, enjoying ourselves before Lent.

Feb. 5. Yesterday was the coldest day so far. A south-west wind might bring us the ice nearer to the Strang House. Clear water up to the ice-banks on the beach at my house. Endless is putting up ice to-day. John McCann is building a 50-foot pound-boat for Booth & Sons. The carriers inform me that the mail goes in the morning. Many sincere prayers will be given for the safe return of the mail-carriers. I. W.

—The editor and wife dined with Col. O. T. Booth, of Hayes, one day this week. To say nothing of the genuine American hospitality of the Colonel, it is an interesting place to visit. We have several times described Colonel Booth's poultry ranch, and we can add very little more than to say that improvements are continually in progress. Brooders, and steam-heating pipes, and nurseries are being added, and within a few months the entire 200 feet building will be full, occupied in the hatching and growing of fowls. Already one side of the building, dividing into compartments, is filled with a crowing, cackling, quacking crowd of birds, and all of the best blooded stock. There are now 1,800 eggs in the incubators, and the Colonel expects to successfully hatch 90 per cent of them, or better. His ambition is to have 25,000 birds ready for the world's fair market, and he will do it.

Official Authority Given for the Statement.

THE C. & W. M. IS TO BE CONTINUED TO PENTOKEY BY JULY 1ST, NEXT.

From the Grand Traverse Herald

The Herald learns from official source at Grand Rapids that it is the intention of the C. & W. M. to push their line north from this place at once. An officer of the road says: "The road will go to Pentokey just as fast as circumstances will permit, the intention being to run cars to Little Traverse Bay by July 1st." This is interesting matter somewhat, for it is well known that the C. & W. M. are rushers, and when they get started north the grass will not be allowed to grow in their right of way.

A Great Opportunity.

Last week we spoke of the excellent opportunity that exists here for a sash and door factory. Again we say there is not a better opening in the state.

This week we point to our wealth of hardwood, including the finest of bird's-eye and curly maple, to our beech, basswood and ash; to its easy accessibility from the point to our unrivalled connection with lake navigation; to its positive certainty, within this year, of a railroad giving direct connections of interest thick here. We point to these advantages, and say that Charlevoix is the best point in Michigan for a furniture factory.

We have every material, every facility, and consequently, every argument.

Musical Martin Niles

Mr. Gilbert has sold his fast gelding to his cousin Cassius M. Martin, of Lansingburgh.

Capt. Joe Sensiba was visit and the schooner Florence, Smith the coming season.

Charlie Graves will replace the steamer City of Marquette, entire, and handle this spring.

The steamer Chickamaw, Captain Dave Parish, will run on the Bowery City and Charlevoix route this season.

There is one consolation in vessel owners and shippers from the north. Arrangements have been made for corn dredging on Charlevoix harbor this spring.

Earnest events and those sure to follow give greater exclusive than ever to the west of a dry-dock at Charlevoix. Capital interested in a dry dock or some thing equivalent would look good, certainly.

It begins to look as if navigation was already open for the season of 1891, so far as ice in Lake Michigan is concerned. At this point the lake is free from ice, and should this mild weather continue a week longer vessels will have to wait for the opening of Pine Lake to set things in motion.

Captains Vandercook and Crow are interested in Harbor Springs tugs Protosi last week, and arrangements for the purchase of a steamer for the Charlevoix-Petoskey route are about completed. The Prince is to be chartered somewhere in lieu to adapt her to the trade, and will go on the Petoskey-Harbor Springs route.

As the shipping acts unusual activity towards. At Washburn's work is progressing on the tug Mission. The hooker has been shortened three feet to give more fuel space, and the carpenters are at work strengthening her frame. Work will soon begin on the Indian Bishop. They will receive wheel, engine and re-rigging. On the other side of Campbell's the tug Hope is undergoing repairs, which, added to those of last year will make her a new boat. This vessel will be receiving an entire new outfit and preparations for her spring work will begin on the tug Avery. The work on her will be of the same character.

The Chicago Evening Post Lake, Ohio, had its Dolphin-cup contest, carrying the Ann Captain Baldwin of Cleveland. "At exactly ten minutes, swinging at a rate, almost great-footed behind the mainsail in his hairy, shaggy back and front, presents the high-crested Berk, gaining at each turn to start a freewing pioneer at dry and wary, as though they were mariners built and by the-lowbed pontoons. His vessel is a huge wild beast and he its tamer. He stands with feet set wide apart upon the double monitor's neck, as upon his circular contraption, and mild the creature may become. Ah, captain! man thy days be long in earthly pain, and may the event that bears you hence be instantly fire it will be freighted deep, with wishes for thine entrance into as sunny a harbor as graces the celestial chart."

—Barbarossa is justly jubilant over her railroad prospects, and the last issue of the SENTINEL fairly runs over with enthusiasm. We have an story upon this subject, and feel like rejoicing with her, that at last there is some basis, besides buncomb, for her railroad talk. But while rejoicing, the SENTINEL does not neglect contributing a stone to one discussion, by asking, "What about the Ward road anyway?" Which is very natural when we remember the forbearance of the Enterprise in this part. East Jordan Enterprise. "The forbearance of the Enterprise." The citizens of Charlevoix yet retain a keen remembrance of a certain issue of that paper, not long ago, in which one whole column was devoted to an elaborate abuse of Charlevoix, and the most interesting part of the remembrance is that the present editor of the Enterprise wrote the column. Yes, the present editor of the Enterprise has been very forbearing towards Charlevoix.

Dating to a delay at Grand Rapids the following famous characters failed to appear at the "Temple of Fame" and will appear at Fox Chalcopyite's prize ball on the 20th: Dan McGinty, Annie Rooney, Pete McCoy, Nellie Bly, Robinson Crusoe and his sister Sue, Mrs. Maloney's twins and Barnum's fat boy, Dan Mallor, Silly Billie, John Sefelius, Cyd Du Tonkey and Uncle Sam, John McGoodland, Bill Sye, Billie Smart, Jim Beard, even to Mary's little lamb. LOVE'S BETTER SELF.

BY MARY MANN.

Was it I who said one day that love
Is not lavish both of thought and gold?
Ah! and who said that love is blind?
There I dreamed of some unfair shrine
Where, or blind, or aloof, I had Twice taken an ancient vision
Of a Love that was all thought and light.
Thought, indeed, and light, and sentimental Thought
Is not enough for love, the shrine
That true love gives, and it knows no idols.
Love, indeed, has children, is a woman's eyes,
And woman's tender tenderness
Is love's own.
Love is a tender force impalpable
Darkly bound soul to soul, heart to heart,
Hand to hand, and lips to lips.
Thus where love was, there love
The Choice also that on the land
Did the love cannot gather of lives
Fair, and fair, and fairest of all
The life into which, and for which, alone
There has not been choice in the world begun.

Ah, no! I look at these words with eyes
Of Pain, and I see the pain
In the tears between my heart-beats known.
Love's pain, from which there hath fled
Not its sweetness to ease its weight
The earth, beneath which love's tears
Lie
Long its sweet hidden love has set words
Which, in love's behalf, I have spoken
"It must be a pleasant pastime, but It certainly must be a little work for you know of any person who needs a governess or housekeeper?"
"Yes, there you really ask me so suddenly, I cannot give you an answer for my advertisement in the Times-today."
As the lawyer spoke he turned from the table over a copy of the paper to which he had referred and handed it to her, pointing to an advertisement for a young lady possessing the necessary for a girl of fourteen—an invalid."
The application was to be made at Castle Caring, the country home of the Hongess of Wynnstay."
"Her own things!" exclaimed Ethel, as the Eldbolt mother, "I must tell you as little as I can."
"Do not do so, pray, for myself. I am attending Early Course Lectures, the basis of which I must, and, as I am going there in a shortnight, I will apply for the position in your behalf, if you wish."
"I should be glad to have you. I am sure I may perform the duties required to the satisfaction."
Asking a few questions as to the qualfications she would specify, Dr. Elfenstein at once proceeded to write a letter with her given the Dowager, and in a few minutes was ready to go. It was checked, and the following week Ethel left her home for a stay at Castle Caring.
Timber her results were carried, after some little difficulty in getting them from the Hall.
On Saturday before she left the vicar had been very kind and helpful one. The day had been very quiet and pleasant
Ethel had had made the long walk light very enjoyable, so much so, that Ethel had left the parlor and cloisters indoors as she spent the evening that led into the house from the small garden in front.
Dr. Elfenstein, happening to be at tea-ne for the evening, was pleased at her ve looking pleasure.
After chatting pleasantly for a few moments, they were interrupted by observing a stranger looking intently upon the gate and advance towards the house.
He was a man about 65 years of age, tall, but with a slight stoop in his shoulders, slender and wiltiony in form.
His face was rather unusie for the good looks, a fine piercing black eye, quartel features, and genuine smile, gi-ing it a winning rather than a repulsive appearance.
His beard was full and pure white, reaching nearly to his waist, while long curls of snowy hair fell over his shoulders.
He continued, was rather on a sleepy order, a quiet one and usual the tranqullity amongst his kind, which a self-ing but unusual opera his head.
In one hand he bore a black leather wallet, to the other about walking staff.
Astonishing to the vicar, he had drawn the wanderer from his seat, he spoke to them, remaining his hat, he spoke the
"I am, sir, a stranger without a charge. My name is Tallwin Hilbo, and I am at present engaged in obtaining subscriptions to several periodical and religious works."
"Perhaps I could satisfy your curiosity to my endeavors, if, as I would plessed to have you, you sit a seat neither to this work."
Drawn a handsomely bound book from his pocket, he offered it to the Dowager, who accepted it.
It appeared to be a work in some alien tongue, having heard it highly recommended, Ethel's pleasure the old man by ordering a copy.
After receiving the desired information the stranger arose, and bidding farewell to the vicar and his family
"Ethel, a singularly-alluring person,
I should like to see you again, if you would be disappointed from walks
This evening, I shall be at Wynnstay, and I shall be pleased to see you."
"Thank you, sir, I shall be very glad to see you."
"Now, Ethel, you look better than when I left you, and I hope you will be able to do so, and I will be with you."
"Ah, I shall be very happy, sir."
"Ah, I shall be very happy, sir."
"Ah, I shall be very happy, sir

Gen. Sherman issued as much of "Marching Through Georgia" that time became an affection. He where he would, those who endeavored to show him honor would either sing the favorite army song or have the tune dinned out by brass instruments. Even when he was making a tour of Ireland the General was serenaded at Cork with "Marching Through Georgia," and the inquiry which followed his his surprised ear was, "Do you every that the tune is an old Irish air whose origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. But like the rose which cannot be robbed of its odor by any change of name, the old tune had lost none of its magic through the discovery of its age.

The Monitor's Not Obsolete.

National pride will be gratified by the announcement that the first armored vessel of our so-called "navy" to take on a crew and go into active service is to be the Miantonomah, a double-turreted iron-clad of the Monitor type. When Ericsson's peculiar little iron clad appeared opportunely in Hampton Roads, in 1862, and first defeated the formidable rebel iron-clad Merrimac, she revolutionized the navies of the world, and made the iron clad the coming ship of war. Naturally the new iron clad of naval critics were then bent in the direction of turret ships, but the rather unsatisfactory experience of the United States government with the Monitor's sister vessels which participated in blockade duty and fighting during the war put the Monitor type of war vessels out of favor, with the application "monitor-coffin" only one of the turret ships created anything like confidence in the seaworthiness of the monitor, and that was the Miantonomah, which took Assistant Secretary of Navy Fox to Russia on a diplomatic mission just after the war. Notwithstanding her low freeboard and the peculiar shape of her hull, the old Miantonomah behaved admirably during several trying gales in mid-ocean.

The new Miantonomah is an entirely new vessel, and not the old turret ship rebuilt, as many have supposed. She was built by John Roach in 1874, is an iron ship constructed on the cellular or compartment principle and is as nearly unsinkable as modern principles of guarding against sinking can make a vessel. She is 252 feet long and 1-4 feet 2 inches wide, and draws 14 feet of water. She is heavily armed, and will make an admirable coast defense vessel.

There are three other turret ships similar to the Miantonomah, which were also built in 1874—the Amphitrite, built at Wilmington, Del.; the Monadnock, built at the San Francisco navy yard, and the Terror, built by the Cramps, at Philadelphia. These vessels can all be placed in service without unreasonable outlay, and altogether they are a formidable coast navy. The Republican party has been loudly assailed by the Democrats in times past for building these ships, but since the Democrats have come to claim a share of the credit for rebuilding our "new navy" they have ceased to ridicule the monitors. When these turret ships of the Monitor type show what they can do there may be a revival of interest in that style of iron-clad, because the war ships just named are full of promise both as to invulnerability in battle and as to seaworthiness in heavy weather.

Progress of the American Tin Plate Industry.

Detroit, Saturday morn.: We have received from Messrs. Norton & Dime, a specimen of their tin cans made of American tin plates, the manufacture of which they have lately commenced. These cans are made and soldered by machinery. The commercial labels are printed in colors directly upon the tin and baked upon the same. This tin plate said over one million of dollars in 1890 for English tin plates. They expect soon to discontinue the importation of the foreign article, as they have nearly finished a complete Siemens steel furnace and rolling mill at Maywood, and will soon make their own steel plates entirely from domestic material and with American labor. The addition of a furnace and rolling mill at Maywood will greatly benefit the place. Toledo has been an advance in England of the price of tin plates, and the cost here is now $5.50 per box, whereas in July last the English prices were $4.50 per box. Messrs. Norton, however, believe these prices cannot long be maintained in the face of the active progress that is being made in this country to establish an industry. In fact they are now offering tin cans at $2 per hundred which last summer were selling at $3 per hundred in Baltimore.

Northern Michigan News.

Hillsdale citizens are talking of getting that lively burg incorporated.

J. and A. McArthur, of Cheboygan have received the contract to do $30,000 worth of work on the world's fair atlas.

The ice now extends about seven miles west from Petoskey in Little Traverse Bay. Beyond that the deep blue waters sparkle in the winter's sun.

The Odd Fellows of Elk Rapids will organize a stock company and erect a two story brick building with a hall in the second story for their own use.

L. H. Langworthy, commonly known as "Barber" Langworthy, one of the pioneers of the Grand Traverse region leaving settled at Old Mission in 1858, is dead.

Frank Moscoso, of Mackinac county, hitches a string of big dogs to a sleigh and says he can haul more cedar poles from the woods with them than he could with a big team.

The railroad which is graded from Frederic on the M. C. railroad to the vicinity of East Jordan, runs for 20 miles over land owned by Harlan Ward. It is said that it will be the longest stretch of track wholly on the land of a single proprietor in the world.

The East Jordan Lumber Co. have just commenced business with their new band saws, which are endless concern. They measure 49 feet in circumference, running over an inch wheel eight feet in diameter. They have five saws, although they use but one at a time.

R. Connable & Sons purchased last week the tug D. L. Babcock, of Chicago, a boat about the size and power of the Parmelee. Their season then this season will be the Babcock, Parmelee and Clara Belle, besides those chartered for fall hauling. The Babcock will fish from Northport, the Parmelee from Petoskey and the Clara Belle from Charlevoix.

The Indian word Ka-ge-che-wang pronounced Kawge-gee-wang means Porcupine Hill. For more than one hundred years an Indian village was on the spot known by that name, but all that is left now is one house and the ancient Catholic church. There are many interesting Indian legends connected with the place that ought to be perpetuated by some historian.

The Old Settlers' Association of Antrim, Grand Traverse, Kalkaska and Charlevoix counties will hold their annual meeting at the town hall in Elk Rapids, Tuesday, March 24, 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m. There will be a basket picnic dinner. Free tea and coffee will be furnished at the hall. Speaking by Rev. Adam Clarke, S. H. Sayler, H. H. Noble, E. S. Noble and other old settlers. Music by Albion quartette and others. A regular old settlers' dance in the evening.

Petoskey Record: Wm. H. Sayers, one of our earliest pioneers, who lives on his farm between here and Clarbetter, was recently injured Tuesday evening. The trap door leading to the cellar had been raised, and Mr. Sayers stepped into the opening, and in falling struck his side on the edge of the floor. Dr. Calkins was called, and found the injury fortunate not in a very serious condition. Four of his ribs were broken in two places, a piece being stepped out of the middle of each rib by the force of the fall and there are also indications of serious internal injuries.

Elk Rapids Progress: Talk that a large manufacturing concern, employing some 400 men, is to locate at this place.—Work on repairing the furnace, getting it ready for another blast is now in progress. As has been previously announced the stack will be raised 20 feet and this important change is taking place. All about the plant experienced men are taking a part, cleaning and putting together the machinery. Wood is coming in at a lively rate and from present appearances work will be resumed about April 15th.—Hon. A. K. Dougherty is fitting out the Iron City floating property for the spring business. Two barges have been refitted, and the boarding scow is to be raised another story, with dining room and kitchen on first floor and sleeping apartments on the second. A long place is the ship yard these days.

The decoration of the Traverse City Masonic Temple took place Wednesday evening under the personal supervision of Grand Master J. Q. Leek assisted by Grand Lecturer A. M. Clark, assisted by local Masons. The ceremony was simple, but impressive and illustrative of the sublime character of Masonry in its highest ideal. After the dedatory services were finished Grand Lecturer Clark delivered an able and eloquent address on Masonry. This was followed by supper and dancing, which was participated in by about six hundred Masons, their wives and sons and daughters. Altogether the affair was a very pleasant and enjoyable one. The lodge room, with ante rooms and parlor, are very elaborately furnished and lighted by electricity. The building itself is owned by Masons, and reflects great credit on the enterprise of the progressive business of Traverse City.

IVORY'S CATCH WORDS.

How Cheap Taste Has Affected Its, nationally the Old Ad.

A strange name for many years' manufacture of bar-soaps, toilet soaps and bric-a-brac of every description, dainty and dingy, is always full of interest, says the Cincinnati Times-Star. It was the reporter's good fortune to stumble on to two of these places. They were the workshops of ivory carvers and wood-turners. One was littered with heels of every shape, and covered with the dust of finely ground all sorts of fancy-shaped pipes of ivory, wood, and rubber. In fact, a general collection very interesting and hard to describe round the shop. Nothing shows all was the yellow dust, the pieces of the shop. This dust apparently on the workman's dress. This shop belonged to a German-Jewish cutter and turner, who, for twenty-two years, has worked at his trade in this same water-room. He is an ivory carver, a worker in fancy wood and rubber and, in fact, in any material out of which can be fashioned something artistic.

His home was not like the gloomy, forlorn carver who inspired that beautiful Moscow poem, "The Ivory Carver," the refrain of which is so familiar:

"Smooth and the dusky ivory Yielded to his touch and cunning form."

Top trade of the ivory carver is not a single of which I used to be. The various machines of modern invention make such a thing cheaper and more plausible to scores of these artists, and instead of being a single piece that has gone demanded. Here are enthusiasts who carve ivory with machines the majority nowadays, with of the real ivory work comparatively little is done.

Two years ago I learned to trade in the old ways and was twenty years to follow it up, and this was twenty two years ago. Then the demand for artistically carved ivory was good. Now, the demand is satisfied with the cheapest of. Mother of pearl work, or gold and silver work, the demand is now free. But now this is changed. The work of the carver is confined principally to gimlinders, ivory knives, ivory rules, and a few non-sensical articles and any elaborate piece of work is made to fill an order. The carver labored comparatively of the dealer of this specialty.

"Yes," said he, with a shake of his head, "I was born with a passion for ivory-carving. But I would. People want only the cheap imitation. When I first came I made not do the work, and was unemployed.

"I learned my trade in Germany, where men also live. What could I do? I had everything with the place of wards. Time backward, forward, and three-quarters. Professional man, inlaid work, cortice supplies, and inlaid work, and inlaid work, and filing layouts I make once in order, though. I make beautiful work when ordered. I make inlaid work, inlaid work, Herculean boxes of a single task. I used to work in that, but we had only the cheapest of goods, and for the least in the yellow. I also shape horns and decorate them, I work in amber. And my cut fleur-de-lis, is a very common and important of the soap. She lies all the cards and throw them in the fire and would eat the varnish from all my fine work.

"Where do you get your ivory?"

"From New York city, and all of the fine wood I use comes from there. Even a walnut-wood piece of the fine carving is done now."

"Is Judy work cheaper now than it was?"

"The work has to be cheaper, but the more costs the same."

The other antique shop discovered was on a similar scale. Here was not the varied collection of fancy articles to be seen. The workman has given up fancy work and now makes the cheap billiard balls for some big firm. He works in hardwood as well as ivory. Here, too, there were numerous gimlinding devices discovered. Here—large in falling struck his side on the edge of the floor. Dr. Calkins was called, and found the injury fortunate not in a very serious condition. Four of his ribs were broken in two places, a piece being stepped out of the middle of each rib by the force of the fall and there are also indications of serious internal injuries.

Backyard Kipling.

Backyard Kipling has, undoubtedly, taken literary London by storm, and yet there is not his name was brought up. Londoners regard him as the coming man, and the attention he is attracting will unless he has a well-balanced head, spoil him personally and as a literary way. Kipling is 24 years old, easy going in his ways and is inside the center of every group wherever he goes. He has pleasant manners, and while English women consider him a sort boorish, he is also, as one woman confided to me, that he is exceedingly "good at parties." His epigram is against him. He is aristocratic, and at times has great scalar trouble. He imbibes over with wisecracks, tells an exceedingly good story, either in parlor or at a dinner, and, as I have said, he is easy to approach. He is a good fellow in some of his deals by audiences twenty-four hours. In a little while the tide came along, and he is a good fellow.

The commercial traveler's voice had gotten over to London, and he pursued his business as if struggling to a position of success.

"What happened to him?" inquired one of the group interested in the social gathering in the surroundings.

"Nothing," said another. "He had a small sum of capital of a dollar—and it made our place a dollar."

Parsley Dust and Superstition.

Some months since a lady purchased from an old colored woman in the northern some parsley, and then asked the vendor to bring her some roots of the herb to her garden.

After this was done, the old woman, Tuesday morning, with "an hour, I wouldn't give you a piece of parsley root for its fortune."

"Why not?" it is no dear small thing?"

"No, ma'am—was the answer—you don't get much out of it, if you do, you don't even. Don't you know it? I thought you knew more, would be a death in one of our families in less than a month?"

A lady who heard the conversation remarked to the speaker of Wir, "Don't I believe in that stuff, and if you will send to my place I will give you all the parsley root you want." The applicant for roots took the lady's address and sent after them, and in less than a month the lady who gave the parsley root died. This circumstance is but another instance of the superstition.—Washington Star.

Pay as You Go.

There's a little little saying, a maxim of old, And to heart it remember is exceeding silver. You can't go all out expecting to attain your goal
Do think well about it—'ere you go.

Would you spend a fine coat, or a carriage and pair?
Then you'd be a fool, nor mind it—nor care
They will stand in good time, if you daily be
They are nothing, and stone-broke, and pay as you go.

The world's not unkind to the poor, but I think
Of the unwelcome guest, for rigors and frost
Time for those thinks it—time—they must Be off, and pay as you go.

There's a satisfaction in options, worth a million,
In a mansion, with servants, and horses, and Yet, and in the shade of all business,
He'll answer you quickly: "I pay as I go."

Are you pushed by the grocer, or back to Your tailor? Are you dunned by your dressmaker
Just balance your income and bills of expense
And begin the year quarter to pay as you go.

When you drive your own home and have
Where your food's filed in and the winter
Then you'll be able to say—"In the level way be The 'Pay as you go' rule."

CUPID ON THE RAIL.

"Jonkins will be on board this 7:30 mail train," Yellow Boy to Livermore, Will spent the day in Jonkins' town.

This was the wording of the telegram I received one wet, sigh night in December. I was sitting in my bachelor quarters, with my feet on a fire blazing grate, with my feet in slippers and my body in a warm dressing gown. I had a mug of hot punch and well mixed, on the table beside me, along with an uncut novel and a glorious Havana, with which I intended to regale myself presently.

This telegram was from my chief, who, I might as well say, was a detective. I had helped him unknown to myself and so managed a spirit to cope with.

Jonkins was as well as regards that Pierre Jordette was a murderer upon whose head was set a price of 2,000 pounds by the crowns, I suppose, and a villainous boy birth, a genius by education, he had when very young married a beautiful English girl, who soon had made his life a long period of unalloyed happiness. At the end of that time some fearful misfortune between them—some knew of what nature—and the information had established his wife to the heart! Her confidence was withdrawn the dead, and she aspired to save the life of her husband. Pierre Jordette fell upon her with savage ferocity and left the two unknown to the world, dead.

I had only to follow instructions.

In a few hundred hours I had Jordette's photograph from my pocket-book and memorized the features of the murderer. It was a singularly handsome face that I saw—clearly cut, with large hazel eyes shaded by long dark lashes, a mouth delicate and sensitive as a woman's, a high, rather narrow forehead, a little broken in clustering curls of auburn hair, a form rather spare, yet well knit, and an hand symmetrical and rounded as a woman's.

I dropped my slippers for boots, got myself inside my fur overcoat, stuffed a loaded revolver and a pair of clubbing truncheons that I might appear a respectable man and, finishing my watch, found I had just time to reach the station.

The train stopped ten minutes for supper, and I was sitting in a corner, who was an old friend of mine, suddenly, and I was thunderstruck. I was given an opportunity of looking through the newspapers previous to the starting of the train.

Jonkins was, I think, not singularly enough, then was a red-headed man on board of it. Jordette was redheaded, and made from that circumstance he had a face which I fastened myself I could not readily mistake.

As I stood irresolute and feeling very much as if I had been caught in a trap, I was roused from the dinning of my ears by a hand on my shoulder, with a shouts but, a white cravat, a dress coat and an opera hat, and this person had red hair and shirt, and

I wanted him clearly. There was a certain man there who had been about him; he would not meet my eye, and I noticed that he was pacing up and down the platform by himself, and remained there minutes, then he put until the last bell rung, and then he hurried on board with the air of one who had had a great deal depended on his getting a seat.

I was convinced then, he was my man, though he was not altogether like the photograph. Still, faces and photographs differ a good deal, since the picture taken is dried expressions and an color.

He entered car No. 171, and at a time the guard put me in the same van. There were three persons already there besides my pickering friend—not my friend, I should rather say, who was reading the Times wrong side up, and seeming wholly over its fascinating columns; a pair of rural lovers lounging on each other's shoulders and exchanging peppermint drops together; and a stout, ruddy-faced, stagger, in the old lady in a very prim bonnet with a bit of lace, and bearing luggage in the shape of a bird-cage, a basket with a cat in it, an umbrella and a very large carpet-sack.

Jordette had produced another section of the paper and was demolishing it vigorously. Seemingly he enjoyed it, for, from time to time, a grim smile was enjoying.

Just as the train began to move the door opened, and a young lady came breathlessly forward. You know what indigenous creatures women are on their feet in a bouncing, swaying railway car, and this young beauty was no exception. She entered, and would have fallen; but I put out my arm and caught her, at the same time offering her the unoccupied seat by my side.

She blushed fearfully, thanked me in the sweetest voice I had ever heard and sunk down on the cushions, leaving me feel—well, not many reverses in life pain my heart so much.

A traveller fore I had never seen. The skin was clear and fair, the mouth sweet, sensitive and a little sad, the eyes dark and melting, and the beautiful dark brown hair waved over her over her shoulders in the prevailing style, was soft as Sou silk, and rippled like the bloom of a meadow brook when it meets over a bed of pebbles.

But so fair was I to contemplating the charms of this fair creature that I could only remember I was not "looking sleep," as Cuthbert had ordered me, and I turned to regard my very unsuspecting Jordette.

If a rogue he was, a very self possessed one. He had finished his pipe, and was picking his teeth with a quill and furtively regarding his boots which, by a peculiar tightness and stiffness of look, I judged were new ones. Occasionally he felt them, as if perhaps his corns were pinched, and once I was sure he ventured something like an oath as he raised his long white fingers over the locality of his great toe.

There was nothing to be done with him until we reached Liverpool, unless he attempted to leave the train, so I sought an opportunity of making acquaintance of my pretty little seat-mate.

She was somewhat shy, but after awhile I managed to overcome her reserve, and we chatted pleasantly, like old friends.

She had not been quite from home, and was a little timid about traveling alone. She stated correctly every thing she can give a birth, and I dragged it by duty to put my arm around the back of the seat to raise her fears.

She had such a horror of railway accidents, she said, that her Aunt Jane had predicted before she left home that something dreadful was going to happen to her, and then she lifted her dark hazel eyes to my face, and I drew the arm down from the seat and let it rest on her shoulder. Men are the natural protectors of women, you know.

We talked on various subjects. My fair companion was very well informed, and her language was simple and elegant. Before I was hardly aware of it I had told her that I was a detective, and that I was making this journey expressly to help capture Jordette, the notorious dude-lyte.

She shuddered and drew a little nearer to me.

"Jordette! said she, nervously, you must be dangerous business. This room is so full of people, I wonder he dare come in."

"Jordette! said she, nervously, you must be dangerous business. This room is so full of people, I wonder he dare come in."

"Oh, he is a desperate character. Pray—oh, do pray be careful."

And she dropped her voice so near to whisper and there was very much expression into her beautiful eyes that I would not resist temptation pressing the white hand so near my own, and which I felt was of such a nature that I would look absent on paper.

That was a very delightful trip to me, and I think it must have been not altogether unpleasant to the young lady, for her cheeks were red and her eyes bright as we approached the termini. She was going to visit her sister, who lived two or three miles to land from Liverpool, so she had to leave her before my journey was ended. I would gladly have gone with her, but I managed to press a warm kiss upon her lips, and to beg her to give me her address that I might call on her.

She promised with a sigh to do so.

I will drop you a line within a week, Mr. Dolphin," she said, sweetly. "Let me see—your first name is—"

"Alphonse. No. 24 Bow street, Liverpool, for the next ten days. Goodbye," and I kissed her again, and saw the door close behind her with a full feeling of pain in my left section of my waistcoat.

And I remember I put my pretty unknown out of my mind, and devoted myself to rousing Jordette, who seemed well exhausted fellow subsen. Talk about the sensations of a guilty conscience, indeed!

At Liverpool Mr. Cuthbert stepped into the car before our one half off, if he except his eye over the occupants, and a look of blank dismay settled on his face.

"Disembarkation!" cried he; as it possible, we must be in time to catch the Dublin mail."

"Is there?" said I, triumphantly, forgetting to my mind-hand fellow-passenger.

"Hush!" said Cuthbert, in a tone of ineffable contempt. "Fair, fair! I mean, of course, the John Philomel, rector of St. Thomas' church, Cumberville. I can do you, sir, shaking hands with the pleasant, Cuthbert! quite a number of times."

"Where is the desire to Jordette?" he exclaimed, suddenly, "did I not order you to lock sleep?"

"Yonder reserved gentleman was the only one on board, I said, as I was answering Jordette's description," said I, doggedly.

The gravel came up at that moment and, unknown to my statement, and Cuthbert was obliged to swallow his disappointment with as good grace as possible. His information relative to Jordette being a traveler by the 7:30 mail had come from one of his most reliable men, but there had been some mistake somewhere. We were not to market the 2,000 pounds exactly in a hurry.

A week afterward I received a letter, written on pink paper, perfumed, and elegant generally. It transcribed:

"My Dear Mr. Dolphin: Having I traffic my address of Saturday you a kiss which was I am disposing, and hope you are well. I am in the greatest trouble. I am in danger of being sent to Botany Bay, where I expect to be counted. Mr. Cuthbert, who is a detective, has been on my track ever since I left Liverpool. He has offered a reward of 2,000 pounds, but self-preservation is the first law of nature. Yours, Jordette."

Extremely Polite Postmaster.

"I do think that Washington postmaster are the most obliging I have ever met," said a lady the other day. I never think about bothering to mail my own letters, but simply hand them to the carrier when he comes, and he is as amiable as to convey them to the post office for me and so save me the trouble of stamping them in the box the next corner. The other day I had a letter to put out for a call, and, meeting the carrier coming up the street, I hastily stamped it and I had forgotten something.

"Mr. Mr. Postmaster," I explained, I have left a postal card on my sitting room mantel and I want you to come to have go off by the earliest possible time. I shall be so extremely obliged if you will see to its being posted. May I ask you to go in, since I am in great haste? You will find it addressed to Mrs. Theophilus Robinson. He is good as to add Baltimore, Md.' to the superscription, which an interruption prevented my completing it properly and make sure that it goes off."

"And do you know that polite letter carrier said 'Thank you, ma'am,' and did just as I told him, even to stamping the door of the house where he came as I requested. I know that he put on the address all right, because Mrs. Robinson told me subsequently that she received the postal card.

"And, to take another instance, when we had another carrier on our street last winter I met him at the corner one day and asked him if he had left any mail at my house.

"Nothing but a postal card, ma'am," he replied. "From Mrs. Spongewick, Brewster, inviting you to take lunch informally with her on Monday at 2 o'clock punctually."

TRADITION ABOUT BEFS.

Those Insects subject to the Keen by a Quarrelsome Family.

There is probably no insect in which mankind takes more interest than the bee, says the London Standard, and there certainly is some animal which so many superstitious have clustered from time immemorial. The importance of the bee has little too has ever played in our domestic life, how the bees have been sung by our poets and moralized on by our preachers, it is not proposed to dilate on here, but some of the current superstitious connected with it, though very amusing, may not be generally known. Formerly, quarrelsome people, if anxious to live in the country and keep bees, are warned by sound ivory waves or their hives will soon become deserted. Bees, too, and we believe are very ingenuous among themselves, but they strongly object, as the country folk, to belong to a contentious household. A quarrelsome family, we are assured, will get so honey, carry as many bees as they may. Another good example set by them is that they refuse to thrive if dishonestly come by, on the contrary, they turn with pain over and die, thereby showing a highly commendable respect for the eighth commandment. And if they were not the wisest, they would seem to be said. To sell them for money is considered a most unlucky proceeding, but they may be bartered away, and all will go right.

A loaded of corn was always considered a fair exchange for a swarm, but a small pig would be taken in exchange. No bee will ever sting the hand they are happy, but to be "spoken of" is fatal. Bees are a great mourner, indeed, them which nothing can be more beautiful than their sufferings if they is touched, and they retire to mind for a while. Bees hate to be used as slavery. Their sympathy with mankind and their troubles are known in a variety of ways. It is a common belief in Hampshire that bees do not sound well when they are sold, but that they can not remember any great security, if swarm at least particular times. But the contemplation accepted belief is that unless the contents cause share or mourner, and that the more particularly in the country, the more grief will death.

In some districts the entrance of a bumblebee into a cottage is looked upon as a certain omen of death, and in others the swarming upon a house or hive is regarded as equally ominous. A story is told in the early of a disconsolate widower, who died in child-birth, whose bereaved wife, in her grief, died also, apparently, because he said, "Bees, I am warned of the event a fortnight before my death." Another, a children, was in into the garden and saw that their bees, in the act of swarming, had made choice of a dead hedgeacons for their settling place. This was regarded as infallible token of approaching death in the family, and a relative soon it is more than probable that the prediction brought about its own fulfillment.

Interesting bees of a death in the family is a custom, and, we believe, practiced in many parts of England. The ceremony is performed in the evening, and if they were not fully represented in the country, and if they were not fully represented in the town would, perhaps, take offence and leave their prices behind them. The ceremony is a custom a few years ago that an inquiry after a surgeon's bees was made in a Hampshire village, and the reply was given further that the bees had left the hives, on a death occurring, their owner, and, in fact, the bees were in mourning. In some districts the country people go from house to house, and, if the bees are there, on a death occurring, desire their owner, and, in fact, the bees were in mourning. In some districts the country people go from house to house, and, if the bees are there, on a death occurring, desire their owner, and, in fact, the bees were in mourning. In some distric

THE COPYRIGHT BILL.

Consideration of the Bill to be pended in the Senate.

In the Senate on the 19th the credentials of Mr. Tatem for the six-month's term in Indianbiles Match Convention and filed. The following among the bills were passed: Senate bill establishing post offices at Hunter and Ashley, Ind. Ter. Senate bill for the fourth judicial district in Utah. House bill to grant right of way through the Cour reservation to the Michigan & Wisconsin Railroad company (with amendments). The Senate then resumed consideration of the copyright bill, discussing proposed amendments to the bill. Mr. Hoar said the Senate committee had considered the subject and had the wants, outlined in the House amendment, but had concluded that it was not expedient in the Forty-second Congress to make any alteration in the copyright law. The Senate committee had considered the question of RAILROAD ECHOES.

Everything Progressing in the Railroad Deal—Mr. Heald Speaks.

On Friday the Board of Directors of the D. C. & M. R. R. Co met in this village. The object of the meeting was to transfer stock within the time prescribed by law preceding the annual meeting of the stockholders. The object was accomplished in the transfer of a large majority of the stock to the C. & W. M. Railway Co. This was the final act giving Charles M. Heald absolute control of the D. C. & M. franchise.

Hon. Solon Humphrey.

William Alden Smith, acting in the capacity of attorney for the C. & W. M. Railway company, has given positive assurance to the common council of Charlevoix that the road would be extended and trains running to Charlevoix within eighteen months. The assurances were given in response to a unanimous resolution adopted by the council offering to issue $25,000 of bridge bonds in aid of the extension, as soon as the council was convinced it would be built within a reasonable time. Mr Smith evidently succeeded in convincing the council and people of Charlevoix generally.

The Board of Directors of the C. & W. M. road, most of whom reside in Boston, have not taken any formal action in the matter, but General Manager Heald, who is personally strongly in favor of extending, has convinced them that it would be a paying investment, so that they are waiting only to decide the legal manner of accomplishing it. Mr. Heald said yesterday: "I have nothing to say officially, as nothing has been decided upon; speaking personally, however, I have no hesitation in saying the extension will be built to Charlevoix. That is as far as I am working for, and I believe there is no question of its being accomplished."

Bellaire Bugle.

The Messrs. Noble, of Elk Rapids, were at Grand Rapids Tuesday to see if the C. & W. M. could be induced to go up the bay shore. It could not.

Roswell Leavitt was summoned to Grand Rapids Tuesday by Chas. M. Heald, General Manager of the C. & W. M. R. R. Co., on matters connected with our railroad.

Roswell Leavitt returned yesterday from Grand Rapids, where he was called to consult with General Manager Heald regarding our railroad. Mr. Leavitt is too modest to allege that he knows all about the matter of right of way through Antrim county, and yet he displays a readiness for the men who clear, grade and lay iron.

Telegram-Herald.

An amicable settlement has been made between C. B. Lane, of Chicago, and the C. & W. M. in reference to the Rock judgment against the D. C. & E. railroad. The C. & W. M. now has an undisputed ownership of the judgment and the road will undoubtedly be extended from Traverse City to Charlevoix during the coming summer.

Cadillac News and Tribune.

Nothing new in the way of railroad news has developed during the past week, with the exception of a report that the T. & A. management had given Mr. Heald, who had decided to extend tidewater to Mackinaw, starting from their present line at a point at or near Mesbain station, a few miles south of Cadillac.

GOOD FIGURES

What the Pine Lake Region Will Contribute to Lake Trade This Year.

In the Pine Lake region the present winter is one of greater activity and prosperity among producers and shippers than has attended any previous year in the history of the region. Contracts have been easy, with good prices ruling, and the winter has been an exceptionally favorable one for work.

Careful investigation shows that the log output will reach fully if not over 40,000,000 about 40 per cent. hardwood, hemlock and basswood constituting the majority of the cut. This does not include the Wilson Hoop Co's all-hoop timber.

The harvest of cedar will aggregate 225,000 pieces, 60 per cent of which are posts, and 40 per cent ties. Cedar shingles will foot up 6,000,000.

We find that the log output this year will exceed that of last by only 3,000,000, while the cedar crop will be nearly double.

It is estimated that only about three cargoes of shipping-wood will go out this year.

Good prices ruling.

RESORT TOWNSHIP

Petoskey Wants It For Its Own Particular County Seat Purposes.

The following is the text of the petition recently presented to the senate at Lansing by the citizens of Resort Township:

We, the undersigned, resident taxpayers of the township of Resort, Charlevoix county, Michigan, respectfully petition that your honorable body will attach the said township of Resort, comprising sections 25 and 26, also fractional sections 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28 and 33, of range 6 north and 6 west, also fractional sections 1, 2 and 12 in range 6 north and 7 west, also fractional sections 31 of range 5 north and one west, also fractional sections 6 and 7 of range 5 north and 6 west, from said county of Charlevoix and attach the same to Emmet county for the following reasons:

1st. Almost one entire business interest of said township of Resort is centered in Petoskey, Emmet county.

2d. About nine-tenths of the boundary line of said township is broken water, commonly known as Great Lakes, therefore practically giving outlying traffic, and interchanging with adjacent business in Emmet county.

3d. All of the principal fishing of the said township of Resort, lies northward into Emmet county.

4th. The seat county of Charlevoix, and at the last annual town-ship meeting, returns by vote to Petoskey as our legal seat.

5th. The said township of Resort contains less than nine sections in area, and its assessed valuation is about one-sixty-fourth of that of said county of Charlevoix, so that the loss financially to Charlevoix county would be almost imperceptible.

If our readers will refer to the map of Charlevoix county, printed on another page of this paper, they will see what the effect of this action will be upon the geography of this county. Charlevoix county is already the smallest county in Michigan, and lies next to the smallest township in Charlevoix county. There are many good reasons why such action should be defeated, for a glance at the map is enough to convince any reasonably minded man that there is something behind the movement besides those given. Petoskey would gain a supervisor, and she has her eye on the county seat. Unquestionably the bill will pass submitting the matter to the people, but we regret Mr. Warbloff's action in pressing the matter.

For Justice.

Judge Montgomery, of Grand Rapids, was nominated for Justice of Supreme Court, at the State Convention at Jackson, yesterday. The nominee is in every way worthy of the position, and will be elected.

With that purpose in view he has leased the Whitman house on Main street, and will soon occupy it with his family. Mr. Thacker also has a lease of the old Ferguson House rooms on Bridge street, and will this spring open up a warehouse for the sale of agricultural implements. Mr. Thacker is in love with Charlevoix, and expresses the opinion that it is the finest town of Northern Michigan.

Nine shares were transferred to certain individuals of C. & W. M. choosing, to enable them under the law to election as directors, but a majority of the stock is held in trust for the C. & W. M., to be transferred to them when they comply with the required conditions. It other words the formal transfer made to the C. & W. M. direct only awaits the official action of that company. The SENTINEL maintains on general grounds that a majority of the stock has practically been transferred to the C. & W. M.

—Mr. Moore, of the East Jordan Enterprise, denies that he wrote the column of blank verse that appeared in the Enterprise some time ago and so stirred up Charlevoix that eggs have ever since failed to settle on her soil. It has been the hope and ambition of our life since recovering from the apoplectic condition into which it threw us, to hunt down and punish the author of that column of wicked jeopardy. We twice came near assassinating Dixon as the only, but discovered his innocence just as we were about to drop a powder into his beer. We have been on Moore's trail ever since only to have the dagger thrust aside by his dectal, which is equivalent to his solitaire. We shall put our nose to the ground again, take a new trail, and hunt the disturber of our happiness to the earth. Hastings from Hayes.

We are too near related to George Washington to be a politician.

We will commence "peelin" bark in Hayes "pretty soon."

M. T. McDermott will move into H. S. Newson's house at young Chicago.

The winter term of school at Bingens closed last Friday.

March came in mighty cold anyhow.

Newson has had more handles applied to his name recently, than he can keep track of. His name is Horace Sebastian.

We are indebted to the Democrat for a copy of the Western Herald. He thought he might gather some ideas upon the improved methods of "peelin" bark.

Henry Ostrum has received notice from the pension bureau that he is to get a pension of $8 per month and $6 per month for six years arrearage.

We have made arrangements for a big bark festival in Hayes, and have invited the Inwood correspondent of the Beacon to participate as toastmaster. The menu will consist chiefly of treasured knotholes garnished with sarsaparilla chips; drinks, oil of bennisack. We will hold it along about election, as we will have a good supply of the oil by that time.

THE MELANCHOLY POET

BY MRS. SAPPHIRA S. MONANGE.

The path is rocky, so he sings,
Of darkened ways and gloomy nights;
His minstrelsy
To that sole theme, the sky spread mold.

He tells in rhyme of fiery darts,
Of hidden tortures, fierce and slow;
Of hopes that lure, but never light;
And hearts about a weight of woe.

The streets will not be laid in gold
The fates pursue him but to scourge;
And his soul finely attuned lyre
Is whence as a funeral dirge.

That weeps from the sand may spring,
Night he ventureth by no means,
Cannot longer hire so sing;
His lyre is tuned to breathe of sorrow.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A few weeks passed on without bringing to Ethel the slightest revelation for regretful sigh that she had changed her home and surroundings. Her mother, who paused to reflect upon this disagreeable phase exposure of her to Sir Reginald, the more she shuddered at the unexpected consummation.

Her white filled with indignation at the brutal manner in which he had received the communication of the news of her death that had so strangely thrown her and the acquaintance of her dishonor, she brought to mind, so far her had received from the effects of his unpowerable rebuke, and how, in her opinion, he had behaved since then and resented.

Ethel was not long in discovering an change in and her mother. The Elfenstein cottage Lady Clarice, but the bare rugged appearance of the condition was all she felt at liberty to make.

The reply ever was that Sir Reginald's generous spirit was in such a terrible state—that it was impossible for him to inspective as yet.

The manner of the Doctor toward her self she thought constrained and reserved, and this gave her heart to ache. She feared that he did not approve of her or else, and thought from his cold appearance, that her refusal to remain him with the respect of her fault might cause him to magnify the error into a serious crime.

After did the poor girl know that his confidence was misplaced, for, in her the real status of his affections, in order to attend to the sacred duty which he had undertaken.

That duty he had by no means forgotten.

We had looked up, after many difficulties, papers of a remote date that had published the entire trial of Florence Glendenning, and had noted the fact that the lady, Annie, Baronet, had testified against him by relating his unfortunate words, spoken in a moment of intense anger.

The thought had then occurred to him that the Adventurer had been witnesses the deed of darkness that had so immediately followed.

Lately, his whole spare time had been occupied in trying to trace out the movements and whereabouts of this man.

The same time all that could discover was that he had returned to Sir Reginald's employment shortly after the murder, and then had suddenly left the place and disappeared, no trace.

Now, he accidentally entered the village postoffice just as the postmaster was saying to an old man who stood near.

"I wonder why Pierre Duval can be I have a letter for him. There was a man named Pierre Duval living at the hall once, do you know what became of him? Leaving the hall, he married Annie Arden, the lady's maid, and went abroad. Anton Duval. He was titled, and unknown, seems to be forgotten, where he went after leaving Sir Reginald."

"Are you sure?"

"Perfectly. He did live six months after leaving here."

"And his murderer escaped?"

"Yes, having no clue to his identity behind him. Detectives did all they could to ferret out the murderer, but the Sir Arthur's face, I suppose, it will never be solved."

The conversation here ceased, but Dr. Elfenstein had not heard enough to satisfy him so long had wished settled. It was impossible to gain information of Anton Duval.

He was dead, and all hope in that direction was at an end.

Entering his gig, he drove to the Hall.

He found Sir Reginald still restless and excited, and after leaving some new remedies with his mother, he left the "good afternoon," and was hastening from the house, when Miss Belle Glendenning called his name as he held the front door open, and beating it say, he stepped into the boudoir to speak to her.

"Dr. Elfenstein," she said very weakly, resting her eyes to him, as he approached, "please excuse me for detaining you, but I desired to speak to know what you think of my uncle—can I expect he will ever be restored to health?"

"I wish I could say he was improving, but really he seems so anxious that he should be well, that it retards his recovery."

"He was when he first received the news of my death. This news upset the poor man, and I know it was the cause of his illness."

"Yes, I have heard so, and I know he was very much upset."

"Strangely enough, he seemed, as every effort was required in order to bring the patient back from a state of fainting."

For fully an hour by Elfenstein and Lady Clarice, he was kept in the house, but, to all was of no avail, he became in the same condition as before, and with the spirit of Sir Reginald foreboding some fatal ending.

Great indignation was expressed at the conduct of the Adventurer, and the sudden death and its cause became more and more.

The consolation of Lady Ethelyn, it was thought, was the only thing that kept him alive, and it was believed that some person in the village, who had seen the man, that he never again must take the liberty to intrude upon the hall.

The person appointed to attend to this was Ben Bill, Mr. Lyle's gamekeeper, and, it was thought, he would be able to keep from the cottage intruder.

Ben, as he kept upon the watch for his appearance, but, strange though he was in his duties, the man never was anywhere to be seen, and at the end of ten days had not again set eyes on him.

In the meantime the funeral of Sir Reginald took place.

The greatest display that wealth and ostentatious can give was made.

The departed baronet had never been loved. His manner, and disposition, had never endeared himself to such as surrounded him. Sir Reginald was not of a lax loss, nevertheless, he was a titled man, and his position, therefore, gave him there, every mark of attention was bestowed upon his family, and he was almost equally shamed name. was rubbing and chaffing his poor hands.

Going instantly to the room the Doctor commenced doing all he could for his recovery, but, he saw at once that the case was desperate, and that he would never revive.

"How did this happen? How was he taken? I saw no symptoms of this a few moments since."

"I was sitting by his side reading," replied Mrs. Fredine, "when the strangest thing happened I ever saw. The blind from the hall opened and a singular looking man entered, and going to the foot of Sir Reginald's bed, stood there, with his eyes fixed upon those of the baronet before him, without speaking one word.

"Sir Reginald started up at the sight of the stranger, in the greatest terror, and, raising one hand as if to push him off, exclaimed:

"'Great God! Marvel! nurse!' then fell back on the pillow in the condition you now see him."

"Which is the man?"

"Seeing what had been the effect of his mysterious appearance, he turned at once and fled from the room."

"Did you not follow him?"

"Yes, he was tall and slender, his hair and beard were white, and very large."

"Had he anything in his hands?"

"In one hand he had a small leather case, or a book and some papers."

"It must be the book, Miss Stiles, the book-seller. I remember now, he was just going out of the front door as I heard you call, and ran up. I had left the door open, and I ran out to speak to Miss Belle in the lobbies, and, in the hurry, I left the door open, and, eager for a chance to get subscribers for my book, I ran after him. I recognized, at the effect his unannounced presence had produced, and I thought I would take a little liberty from the house. In Sir Reginald's serious condition he would be sorry to see so singular looking a person by his bedside, and I thought I would take the book and his leave from the room."

"Did you see the man?"

"No, I did not, I lost sight of him, as every effort was required in order to bring the patient back to consciousness."

For fully an hour by Elfenstein and Lady Clarice, he was kept in the house, but, Genuine Democratic Tactics.

A more high handed and outrageous piece of political robbery cannot be cited in the annals of politics than that perpetrated by the Democrats in the State Senate on the 24th. Taking advantage of the absence of a number of Republican senators at the state convention, the Democrats suddenly, and without any previous notice, presented reports in the two contested election cases in the Cheboygan and Lenawee districts, unseating the Republican senators and seating their Democratic contestants, thus seeking to push the straight Democratic strength in that body to 18 members, while reducing the Republican members to 12. In both these cases there was no evidence to warrant the reports which were made and so flimsy had been the grounds upon which the contests rested, that it was not supposed that they would be further prosecuted.

It neither case did a majority of the senate vote to unseat the sitting member and to put the contestant in his place. In the second case—that of the Lenawee district—no quorum was present, the Republican seat was thrown members having left the hall.

It was pre-arranged by the Democrats of the Senate, in conjunction with the Democratic State Central Committee. Such unjust and revolutionary methods should receive the condemnation of every fair-minded man within the boundaries of the State.

A Glaring Outrage.

The Detroit Journal is an independent paper, but it refers to the recent outrage by the Democrats in the State Senate in unmistakable terms of condemnation. It says: "In business, such a performance would send the scoundrel to the penitentiary. In politics, it ought to send those guilty of it to Coventry. It would disgrace even the Detroit board of aldermen. Mr. John Christopher Jacob Strong is the full name of the lieutenant governor who sided in this rascality, and the Democratic senators who did it are the McGinnies, the O'Hagans, etc., of the Democratic party in the State.

The secretary of the Democratic state central committee was there not only to sanction, but to engineer the knavery. The 'skin game' is characteristic of the Democratic party when once it acquires power.

It is well that it happened before, instead of after election. It will help arouse the Republicans in the state who slept at home last fall. They will understand the kind of rascals they allowed to slip into power in this state. It will bring out their vote as an ordinary contest would not have done. If there were any doubt before, it will elect Th. Varnishes candidates. The Republican majority in the state of Michigan will push it.

Grover a Close Guesser.

Hon. C. S. Hampton, in view of Hon. Grover Cleveland's attitude on the silver question, has declared that the illustrious citizen can never again be president.

But then, we cannot tell what time will bring forth. We remember well when Charlie was running a green hook paper at Harbor Springs, he said that "if the charges against Grover Cleveland were true, as they undoubtedly were, he was a creature for scorn and contempt."

Charlie supported him next time he ran, and he will do it again when the time comes, if it does. Consistency is entirely foreign to Mr. Hampton's political nature.

Detroit Democratic Treachery.

Detroit Journal: The Democrats in the Michigan senate, their aides and abettors, have done a good piece of work for the Republican party in this state. The Democrats are in a minority in Michigan. They cannot carry it on a full vote. Their victory was due to a fall party to the defection of the Patrons of Industry, mainly to the absence of the Republicans from the polls. The Free Press and other Democratic leaders admitted after election that it was not a Democratic victory but a Republican defeat, and that their continuance in power would depend upon the use they made of it. By their conduct in the senate this week they have shown the use they make of it. They have offended the farmers, they have avenged the old Republican resentments and antipathies. They have handed the state back to the Republicans, as most people acquainted with their intrigues stupidly supposed they would.

Northern Michigan News.

Torch Lake will not freeze over this winter.

Frank May, of Bayne Falls, has gone to Ann Arbor for medical treatment.

L. L. Freeman, of Cadillac has shipped over 120,000 bushels of potatoes this season.

Cheboygan's 400 will build a magnificent club house at Dodge's Point, Big Mullet Lake.

Senator Wilkinson at Lansing has given notice that he will introduce a bill to incorporate Hillsdale.

R. T. Gray was called to Grand Rapids by telegram to-day by the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. on matters connected with the Elk Rapids branch.—Kalkaskian.

An Indian father drew the body of his dead child on a hand sled thirty-five miles across the upper end of Lake Michigan that it might be buried from the Catholic church.

St. Ignace has a very strong mayor. The other day he lifted the two wheels and connecting axle of a freight car with three men aboard the safe, estimated dead weight, 1,100 pounds.

A correspondent sends a whopper from Cross Village: "We have in our midst a man who is well-to-do, that has worn a pair of overhalls, summer and winter, since 1836. They have become so rigid that he has put in the knees in order to walk."

A Petoskey gentleman, in a private letter to the Indian News, says: "Last night two car loads of tools arrived here for the new railroad to Pellston to work with on the road. They are going to commence work from here to Charlevoix the first of March."

Hon. Perry Hannah, of Traverse City, will erect a fine new $25,000 residence next summer. Then, of course, the modest little white cottage with its green blinds, which has for many years been a well-known landmark of the Northland, will disappear.

As the night express, coming north on the G. R. & I., neared Vita at 4:30 Sunday morning, the engine struck something. The engineer saw a dark object rising in the air. He stopped and on going back the train men found a dead Indian. He was taken to Alba and found to be Peter Petoskey, son of Simon Petoskey, of Petoskey.

It is asserted by the Ishiate Press and the Manistee Herald, that the delinquent tax list for Antrim county sent out by Auditor General Soper, and published by the Elk Rapids Progress, is so defective in the description that a very large part of the publication is illegal and worthless, even if the whole list be not invalidated.

Speaker Wachtel, Tuesday, introduced the bill to organize Maple county from territory detached from Cheboygan and Presque Isle counties with Wolverine as the county seat. It is the same territory they tried to organize into Sumner county, when C. S. Hampton represented that district, the only difference being that then Indian River was to have been the county seat and now Wolverine.

Cadillac News: The Traverse City Regis, one of the oldest and one of the leading Democratic papers in Northern Michigan, refers to the proposed Democratic representative gerrymander as, not only unconstitutional, "but unjust to the northern counties." It is hardly probable, however, that such minor matters as opposition to the constitution and injustice to the northern counties will be permitted to interfere with a scheme to advance the interests of the Democrat party.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mr. C. I. Lorraine, the proprietor of this paper, with his family will start for this place about the third of March.—Capt. J. L. Emory of the Cummings, informs us that they have decided to run that boat between here and Traverse City the time as last year. The only change will be in her running time. She will wood here sufficient for the round trip, and arrive about one hour and fifteen minutes sooner at both ends. The Crescent will run the same as last season, and that of the Chicamaw has not yet been decided upon.

Traverse Herald: Lewis Miller, formerly of Traverse City, now of Charlevoix, has been in town for a few days, leaving for his home today. Mr. Miller is "the oldest inhabitant," this year making the fifteenth since he came to Grand Traverse. A member of the Herald staff held an interesting interview with him yesterday, and his description of old time days were very vivid and interesting. When he first came to the spot where Traverse City now stands a stroke of a white man's axe had never been struck, nor a foot of land taken up along the bay shore. From East Bay to the foot of the hills west of West Bay was a beautiful pine forest, close to the water's edge, the trees so far apart and with no underbrush that one could ride easily anywhere. The level land immediately was covered with a soft carpet of pine needles. The hills on either side the bay were wooded to the water's edge. Mr. Miller has located the shores to an Indian canoe from the head of Grand Traverse Bay to Little Traverse Bay, in the autumn, when, he says, the whole coast line was an ever changing panorama of the most brilliant color and beautiful views that could possibly be imagined, and not a vestage of civilization during the whole journey. Before coming to Grand Traverse Mr. Miller went to Chicago from New York state. Chicago was a little hamlet, on marshy soil, with no bridge across the river which was only a muddy creek, the stream of crossing being a flat bottom scow pulled back and forth by ropes. While he was there he assisted at Chicago's first fire, which burned nearly two-thirds of its one pineapple street, and stood in line passing buckets of water until the conflagration was stayed. He did not like the town, and started for Kingston, Canada, on the schooner Jefferson. After eight days of sailing, during all the time of which he was sick, he vowed to stop at the first port made, which was Mackinac. Here he met Benson Dame, then Indian farmer at Old Mission where Rev. Mr. Dougherty was located, and Old Mission was the next objective point. When a year or two later Mr. Boardman started a mill here, at what is now nearly the west end of Front street, he and Michael Guy, who now lives on East Bay, and stands second in the list of our old inhabitants, came over from Old Mission on the trail to help raise the mill. It is very interesting to meet a man like Mr. Miller, whose memory holds the details of such changes, not only in our section but in the entire country, and to listen while he describes the wonderful growth of our nation in the past half century.

Chicago has at last decided to resume the Worlds Columbian Exhibition in Jackson Park. She will use $250,000 by so doing, and also get through with the national republican festival in the preparation of a lake front site. Chicago has wasted a good deal of time energy to reach a conclusion in this matter, and it is high time she began to hustle in her characteristic manner.

There is a scarcity of blue jackets in the United States navy, and recruiting proceeds with discouraging slowness. A number of war ships are without full complements, and in consequence several important projects of Secretary Tracy cannot be carried into execution. It would seem from this that there is no danger of a rebellion at a little brighter hope of preferment where gives the ordinary seamen the recruiting officers would soon make better reports.

Detroit Journal: The Democrats on the Michigan senate, their aiders and abettors, have done a good piece of work for the Republican party in this state. The Democrats are in a minority in Michigan. They cannot carry it on a full vote. Their victory was due last fall partly to the defection of the Patrons of Industry, mainly to the absence of the Republicans from the polls. The Free Press and other Democratic leaders admitted after election that it was not a Democratic victory but a Republican defeat, and that their continuance in power would depend upon the use they made of it. By their conduct in the senate this week they have shown the use they make of it. They have offended the farmers, they have aroused the old Republican sentiments and antipathies. They have handed the state back to the Republicans, at most people acquainted with their invincible majority supposed they would.

New York she will not get, that by so doing, and also get through with the railroad squabble incident to the preparation of a site for it, which Chicago has wasted a good deal of time energy to reach a conclusion in this country, and it is high time she began to hustle in her characteristic manner.

There is a scarcity of "blue jackets" in the United States navy, and recruiting proceeds with discouraging slowness. A number of war ships are without full complements, and in consequence several important projects of Secretary Tracy cannot be carried into execution. It would seem from this that there is room for naval reform, if a little brighter hope of preferment were given the ordinary seaman the recruiting officers would soon make better reports.

A THEATER IN FLAMES.

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE AT ROCHESTER DESTROYED.

The Chillies Was Burned Then Chillies Commented—Lynching an Indian Murderer—A Fun in Countess National Gas Explosion—Gen. Sherman's Funeral.

REED AT WORK AGAIN.

Needy Soldiers in Iowa Will Soon Be Relieved.

SPEAKER REED seems to be in the chair in the House of the 49th Congress more than in the 48th. The House passed the Senate bill for relief of soldiers in certain Indian lands in Southern Iowa. In the Senate the credentials of Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, for his late term (unexpired term, ending March 4, 1885) were presented and the Senate resumed consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Considerable time was spent before the recess, some of which was devoted to a speech by Senator Sherman. The President is still terribly very high opinion of Mr. Hoke's Superintendent ability and also friends of the family claim that the appointment has awakened the President to a realization of the fact that Mr. Hoke is a Democrat. Mr. Cleveland's Indianapolis friends say the President and his Cabinet, which spoke of his disposition to make a change, are now tending the resignation of General Sherman.

THE JOURNEY TO THE GRAVE.

Gen. Sherman's Funeral Service—The Remains Lying in State.

New York paid every possible tribute of respect to the memory of General Sherman, whose last wishes were fulfilled upon a scale of a magnificent character. The remains rested in an inner bedroom on the parlor floor of his late residence, the Ninth Street house, and the coffin, covered with the colors, general insignia and wreaths, was placed in the parlor, which was transformed into a bower of flowers. The ceremonies were simple, the Episcopal service being read by the Rev. Dr. Vinton, of Paris, which was followed by the funeral.

With regard to the prohibition of the work general section is issued by the Pennsylvania Railway in Kansas City, and it seems to be a bugbear of city worse. Fire spread rapidly and despite the efforts of the fire department consumed the house. There were eighteen engines in the house, and they were also useless. The total loss is estimated at $175,000. The Cypress round house was burned in Boston as the place of a siege during the Southwestern strike of 1886.

EASTERN OCCURRENCES.

Many houses in Johnstown and Cambria, Pa., were flooded owing to heavy rains, and in some instances people were leaving their dwellings in boats. The one bridge remained unscathed. Floods have also caused heavy damage in Eastern Ohio and West Virginia.

SEVERAL cars laden with express cars of the New England Terminal Company tumbled off a float in New York harbor, during a collision that took an unknown steamer.

THE drought in Central and Southern California has been broken by a heavy rainfall.

At Pittsburg, Pa., both rivers are twenty-two feet and rising at the rate of seven inches per hour. The rise in water was unexpected, and families have moved from their houses in the lower part of Allegheny, as several streets are flooded to the second-story. The Pittsburg and Western Railroad is covered in the city, and all travel at that road is stopped, while many mills lining the rivers have been forced to close down. Reports from the head waters show steady gains, with rivers still rising and lower towns flooded. Bridges are being carried away in every direction, and the loss is great. In Pittsburg the rivers are up the full 30 feet as high as in 1884.

A woman and four children perished in a tenement house fire at Brooklyn, N. Y. The woman came upon the building. All these escaped with the exception of Mrs. Julia Hurst, a widow living in the third story, who, stopped to save her three children. GALLANT PORTER DEAD.

COMMANDER OF THE NAVY RELIEVED.

He Passes Peacefully Away at His Washington Home—Hard Trouble the Cause of His Brilliant Services in His Country.

Washington Sunday Chronicle.

Admiral David D. Porter, the ranking naval officer of the United States, long commander-in-chief of the United States navy, died at his home in this city at 4 this morning of fatty degeneration of the heart. The end came quietly, and it was a surprise had it occurred at any time within a year. He has been seriously ill for many months, yet at the end came suddenly and unknowingly, with not a few minutes of warning. Twelve years ago the Admiral had a severe attack, from which he never regained his vigor, and from which he was never cured. Five years ago he was taken, then Surgeon General of the United States navy, under the examination, and told the old sailor that there was symptoms which indicated the fatal ailment. The Admiral had for several months been practically dead to the world. He had not left his room since he entered it in October, on his return from his summer home at Newport. His death finally came from the result of a considerable cause, and the issue of which was his advanced age. The Admiral's death will result in no naval changes. Though commanding on the active list, he has been in practical retirement for a great many years.

The remarkable feature of the death of the Admiral, David Dixon Porter, was completed his work on Washington, after an career days, success and adversity.

GEN. SHERMAN IS DEAD.

THE OLD WARRIOR PASSES PEACEFULLY AWAY.

Surrounded by Friends, He Makes His Last March to the Sea—His Bereaved Family Prepared for the Distressing Ceremonies Attending the Remains.

(New York Cupack.)

Gen. W. T. Sherman, one of the greatest heroes of the late war, has completed his march and entered the ranks of the dead. His death, which occurred in New York City, was peaceful and painless. So quietly did the soul of the gallant soldier pass from this life that even friends were scarcely aware of its departure.

Fortunately all the necessary steps had been taken, yet at the end came suddenly and unknowingly, with not a few minutes of warning. RIVERS STILL RISING.

JOHNSTOWN'S BUSINESS SECTION SUBMERGED.

Prisoners in the Jail Liberated to Prevent Them from Being Drowned. Rescuers Lose Life on the Lower Susquehanna.

Notwithstanding the rising flood, a Johnstown, Pa., special says, Sunday morning, the rivers in its bands and seen the water came pouring steadily into the streets and flooded the business section of Johnstown. Both the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers are rising rapidly and feeding the flood. Thirteen lost adrift on the Susquehanna and began pounding right and left. By unless of the Pennsylvania Railroad was flooded all parts of the city to remove property to places of safety and to show no mercy to anything who was, upon to steal anything. A powerful guard was stationed and worked in connection with the guard of volunteers to the protection of property and the moving of property. The rain fell yesterday and a few of men who worked all night in the cross bridge keeping the bridge from being swept away. Sunday morning the rain fell and the bridge was thought to be safe. The bridge was thought to be safe. The bridge was thought to be safe. The

The Form and Extent of the Conspiracy.

Last week the SENTINEL called attention to the scheme being worked at Lansing to set off into Emmet county certain territory in Charlevoix county. The territory was described as the Township of Resort. This limit was given without proper examination.

It seems that not only Resort but Bear Lake and Springvale are included in this nicely laid plan to change the county map of Michigan in the interest of our ambitious neighbors. The Petoskey Record of last week makes an exhaustive argument in support of the project, but places itself squarely upon a status of championship of the interests of the people within the territory described.

The Record has the matter all arranged by which "a new town will be made from the south half of Littlefield, and Littlefield made good by the addition of Springvale, and Bear Lake could be added to Bear Creek, (Petoskey.)

Knowing the editor of the Record as we do, we cannot reconcile our high opinion of him with the evident misrepresentation that characterizes his editorial. Why should he intimate that the object can only be attained by a vote of the people? He knows that an act of the Legislature is all that is required in the matter; that such changes are frequently made by legislative act. He knows that Mr. Wachtel has the thing all arranged; that the scheme has long been contemplated, but just ripened into blossoming beauty under the influence of favorable conditions. Section 2 of Article X of the Constitution says

"No organized county shall ever be reduced by the organization of new counties to less than sixteen townships, as surveyed by the United States, unless in pursuance of law a majority of electors residing in each county to be affected thereby shall so decide."

Pretishes are cons. It does not require the opinion of an attorney general to secure a proper construction of the law, as affecting this case, and the Record knows it. Therefore he need not qualify the expressed hope for the success of the scheme by a suggestion of the necessity for popular approval.

The STANDARD regards the question as one rising above county seat considerations, in respect to either county. Mr. Wachtel need not take the trouble to incorporate a popular vote clause in the bill, the people of Charlevoix county will not cede any territory, except, perhaps in exchange for the Township of Banks. The scheme is only preliminary to deeper designs.

The fact of commercial affinity between Petoskey and the Townships in question cuts no figure in the case. The constitution does not provide for the establishment of commercial boundaries, nor prescribe corporate limits with the view of determining where a farmer shall sell his hogs. This is not the only place in Michigan where the road to market crosses county lines.

We are almost constrained to believe that the ghost of Dennis T. Downing, of old Little Traverse notoriety, is stalking abroad in Emmet county, and again directing affairs as he did in the days when we dated our letters "Charlevoix, Emmet county, Mich."

Can't Go Back on This Authority.

Petoskey Democrat: Tuesday morning the entire engineering corps of the C. & W. M. road started on from Traverse City with orders to locate and cross-section the extension clear to Charlevoix. This means that the road will be built to Charlevoix this summer.

Another Chicago Steamer for Charlevoix.

The Northern Michigan Line has chartered the fine steamer Soo City to run in their line between Chicago and Mackinac, via this shore. It is understood she will make two trips per week.

The Soo City is a magnificent steamer, larger than the Charlevoix, and should prove a fine

THE NEW R. R. CO.

The Chicago & North Michigan Its Corporate Name.

Grand Rapids Democrat.

A number of prominent railroad men and capitalists met in the office of General Manager Heald of the C. & W. M. last Saturday, and organized the Chicago & North Michigan Railway Co. The action taken was very important, inasmuch as it means the immediate extension of the Chicago & West Michigan road from Traverse City to Charlevoix. The new company is running a distinct and separate organization, with independent name, capital stock, officers, directors and charter of its own. In reality, however, it is merely the legal form adopted to accomplish the extension mentioned, it having been deemed advisable to have the road built by a construction company and turned over to the C. & W. M. rather than for that road to build the extension itself.

The capital stock of the new company is $1,000,000, and the officers are as follows: President, Charles M. Heald; vice-president, Wm. Alden Smith; treasurer, F. H. Prescott, of Boston; secretary, James Austin. The Chicago and West Michigan road, of course, furnishes the capital, and when the extension is completed it will be formally turned over to that road. The route of the extension has already been surveyed, and estimates of cost of construction made. It is expected that actual construction will begin as early in the spring as practicable.

The Bay-Shore Route.

The Elk Rapids Progress of last week is fairly bubbling over with joyousness over what the editor seems to think is a certainty that the C. & W. M. extension will come to Charlevoix via Elk Rapids. From its columns we take the following collection of items bearing on the subject Engineer Northrup, of the C. & W. M. arrived in town Tuesday with his force to do some work in this vicinity.

Reported that the C. & W. M. are now at work finding the shortest route between this village and Traverse City.

It is pretty generally circulated in town that the surveyors now here are to run a line from here to Charlevoix via Ironsport.

And then, when Ben gets a little drunker, this is the way he dishes it up to us:

We will inform the Herald-Leader Review that the C. & W. M. will build their main line through Elk Rapids on the bay shore. The company expect to put in a logging road around to Bellaire, and will pull it up when the timber is gone.

Oh, the wicked wretch! But just listen to him as the wood-alcohol becomes more marked in its effect:

Elk Rapids Progress. The following letter Mr. S. S. Spalding hands us as coming from a gentleman who has looked over the property and talks business. If Norwood has iron, coal or natural gas, the facts will be known the coming season:

"Years of a recent date received in reply we would say we have the tools and machinery, first-class, in readiness for a trip to Michigan to develop that country, but will not ship anything until I go and see how much territory I can secure, which I expect to do in the spring. You will probably hear from me again soon. You might give me some pointers as to the amount of land you think I could lease."

TO-DAY

Occurs the Annual Meeting of the D C & M Stockholders.

As we go to press the annual meeting of the stockholders of the D. C. & M. R. R. Co. is being held in this village. General Manager Heald and Attorney Smith, of the C. & W. M. are here, also H. M. Chesbr.

The nature and importance of this meeting is already fully understood by our readers. It is expected that after this meeting definite announcements will be made. But, whatever is the outcome, nothing can occur to change the determination of the C. & W. M. to build at once. It only affects the matter of details.

Torch Lake and Norwood Probably in the Swim.

Evidences are numerous and apparently unmistakable that the C. & W. M. Railway Co have decidedly and radically changed their plans and abandoned the intermediate valley route for the bay-shore. The engineering engineers are to-day seen other north of Elk Rapids, working north.

We Begin to Hear the Rumble

Already the evidences of a boom for Charlevoix begin to appear. Correspondence is now going on between Charlevoix real-estate men and parties who desire manufacturing sites here.

This is only the beginning. Investigation, which is sure to follow active railroad operations, will establish the fact that around the DeCa-Ne-Ne-Ta, from Two Mile Point to Oyster Bay, there are the finest locations for manufacturing enterprises to be found in the State of Michigan.

Albert in Pine Lake is about on Lake Michigan; and the combination of water with railroad transportation facilities, such as will exist here, cannot fail to attract here various industries now located far from first sources of material.

The STANDARD makes the map of Charlevoix county the text of its argument and the source of its faith. It is a prophecy in itself. A study of its outlines, its water ways, its free connection with lake commerce, and its relations to contiguous territory, made more striking when viewed in the light of still other railroad projects, will convince any observing man that there is a great future in store for Charlevoix.

There Seems to be a Hen On at Norwood.

Elk Rapids Progress. The following letter Mr. S. S. Spalding hands us as coming from a gentleman who has looked over the property and talks business. If Norwood has iron, coal or natural gas, the facts will be known the coming season:

"Years of a recent date received in reply we would say we have the tools and machinery, first-class, in readiness for a trip to Michigan to develop that country, but will not ship anything until I go and see how much territory I can secure, which I expect to do in the spring. You will probably hear from me again soon. You might give me some pointers as to the amount of land you think I could lease."

—Happy little Bellaire!

—Robt. McNeill was over from the Heaves to-day.

—Dr. G. W. Crouter left Monday for a trip to Alabama.

—Quincy Thacker went to Traverse City after his wife yesterday.

—O. W. Smith has sold one of his patent cheese-cutters to Amos Fox.

—Baker & Son will next week erect a warehouse for agricultural implements.

—Let the meeting at the Village Hall next Wednesday evening be an enthusiastic one.

—I. J. Kanagy, of Joliet, Ill., is here visiting his parents, Rev. J. J. Kanagy and wife.

—Senator Wilkinson has introduced a bill to attach the Manitou Islands to Leelanau county.

—Charlevoix seven hours from Grand Rapids, and twelve from Chicago! Think of it!

—W. H. Downer went north Monday. He goes to the Cheneaux Islands and perhaps further.

—A letter from our old friend Byron Lee states that he has been ill all winter with an abscess in his head.

—Rifenburg has a new ad. Read what the "Iron Duke" has to say. The Charlevoix flour takes the lakey.

—Married—at East Jordan, March 9th Dr. G. W. Crouter, of this place, to Miss Jennie Lathlips, of East Jordan.

—Our item concerning the village park noted last week contained one too many cyphers. The amount is $900.

—Judge Mayne's office was entered by some persons with felonious intent one night last week, but did no damage.

—Let every citizen attend the Charlevoix Improvement Association meeting at the Village Hall next Wednesday evening.

—Make no engagements that will conflict with the Improvement Association meeting next Wednesday evening at the Village Hall.

—G. C. Gilken writes the SENTINEL from Frankfort, that the Alopaca's nets were set on the 7th. The ice is all out and the shore boat is running.

—There is no question about being able to find natural gas in the township of Norwood if they strike the correct locality; and it will be pretty close to the surface too.

—After a careful examination of the evidence, we opine that the Elk Rapids Progress will have several more patches on its pants before it sees the main line of the C. & W. M. there.

—O. W. Smith has a new advertisement on this page that he calls attention to. He will from time to time make special announcements in that space, and it will be well to watch it.

—Some person surreptitiously relieved Capt. Partridge's fish house of a good brass lock last week. The captain says if the party will call he will give him the keys, as they are no good to him.

—Endress & Co. are closing up their net work and will soon be fitting out their steamer and tugs. They have some mending to do yet, and all their new nets to lead, which will require four tons of leads. Their entire outfit of nets requires 80,000 corks.

—Prof. Arthur Nelson has composed another anthem, "Rock of Ages," which eclipses any previous effort. The production is one of merit, and would grace the pages of any anthem collection. It was sung from the manuscript at the Congregational church last Sunday.

—It is well to sleep with one eye open, or keep a good dog. There are rumors of burglars floating in the air. Several citizens claim they have evidence of some person trying their windows, and Sunday evening a man was caught looking in at the window of a Main street residence, but was not identified. Last Thursday night Calkins & Warne's store was entered by the rear door and the contents of the cash-register, amounting to several dollars, taken. There will be a hole perforated in this town some of these nights.

—General Manager Heald, in a conversation with the editor of this paper last week, said: "We take an especial interest in Charlevoix, and you may be assured we shall do all we can for the town." Attorney Wm. Alden Smith said: "We shall do even more for your town than you have expected."

—Will Charlevoix county permit her baby to be kidnapped by those wicked men at Petoskey?—SENTINEL. That's very, very false. The baby has been severely spanked and otherwise maltreated by its mother, and the latter has been mean enough to refuse to nurse her own baby. Therefore the child has run away, and Emmet will make it a kind step mother—that's all.—Petoskey Record

—Tallapoosa (Ga.) Journal: Mr. C. H. Winsford, recently of Ludington, Mich., has purchased ten acres, which he is clearing up preparatory to starting a vineyard. He has nearly completed a neat six room dwelling, and next week will begin the erection of good barns. Adjoining him on the east, Mrs. Maria Bouchier, recently of Charlevoix county, Mich., has purchased a ten acre tract, which he is being cleared up preparatory for spring work. She is having erected a neat 7 room cottage and out-buildings; she also will start a vineyard and garden. Adjoining her property on the east, Mr. Edwin Bedford, recently of Charlevoix county, Mich., has purchased ten acres, which he is clearing up with similar intentions. He also is erecting a home. All the above land is well located on a high elevation from which the city is visible, and lays well for vineyard and garden purposes.

A Good Idea.

Petoskey Democrat: In another column is a communication from Rev. J. G. Ingle, suggesting the organization of a society to prepare and preserve historical matter pertaining to Emmet county. We heartily approve the suggestion, and we believe that our citizens should take hold of the matter without delay. We gladly offer the use of our columns for further suggestions, and invite all interested to send in their ideas.

The idea is a good one. We not unsee a "problem." A valuable relic to file away in the archives of the society would be a copy of the Harbor Springs Independent, published away back in the '70's, in which the editor predicted the speedy disintegration of the Democratic party.

Current Marine Notes.

From this point there is every indication of an early opening of navigation. There is no ice in sight. The ice in Pine Lake, however, is quite solid, and will require considerable solar influence to break it up.

S. S. Burke, manager of the N. M. Line, was here Thursday, and confirmed the statement made in these columns last week concerning the steamer Soo City. The Northern Michigan Line folks have taken the contract for four years to carry Beaver Island mail.

Henry Barth has the new boiler of the steamer Gordon about completed.

Capt. Kittland, of Cheboygan, says he would not be surprised to see the straits free of ice before the close of March.

The following vessel transfers are reported: One half of schooner Jennie Weaver by J. H. Perrine to A. Anderson, of Racine, for $1,600; one-half schooner Willard A. Smith to Joseph Miller, of Milwaukee, N. S. Johnson, of Milwaukee, has bought the schooner Morning Star, for $5,000. Later he sold a half interest in the vessel to Capt. Ellis, of the steamharge Burroughs. As they are equal owners of the Burroughs, it is surmised that the vessel will tow with her this season.

Herman Krones has sold a half interest in the schooner Willard A. Smith to Joseph Miller, of Milwaukee.

The brush contract for Charlevoix harbor has been let to Richard Shapton, instead of A. Fox, as was stated last week.

Capt. James Beauvais, late of the U. S. survey steamer Michigan, has purchased a quarter interest in the steamer Lucile, and will command it the coming season. Capt. Beauvais cannot fail to make the Lucile popular. He is eminently competent, and as fine a gentleman as ever rung a bell. The Lucile will run about the same as last season.

Capt. "Sil" Carter has returned from Grand Haven with papers, and will sail the tug Rawson this season. Capt. Jim Carter will occupy the engine-room.

Good board at the Ingleside.

Health Items.

Geo. Smith and family have gone to Wiatcom, Wash., with the intention of making that their home. Mr. Smith has a brother living there.

Master Jamie Wilkinson is quite sick with fever.

Mrs. Felix Coon, who has been quite seriously ill for some time, is slowly recovering.

Flanagan's mill is running day and night, cutting lumber days and shingles nights.

Mrs. John Spriet is visiting friends in Kalamazoo and Grand Rapids.

Will Superjaw is running the edger in Dufresne's mill, at Intermediate.

A good many of our townsmen are called to Bellaire as witnesses this week.

Eastport expects the C. & W. M. will make that place the terminus of their shore line; but, alas, if Eastport should get left one would shove up into a little pile of wooden houses and sand, and be swallowed up by Torch Lake. Keep up good courage, Cal., you may get a good wagon-road through town, if you don't get the railroad.

TALK, BUT NO ACTION.

Congress Not Accomplishing Much in the War Of Legislating.

In the Senate on the 18th the Hawaiian commission bill was taken up and a substitute for it made by the majority, Senators Morgan and Gorman advocating a form of government for the islands similar to that of Arizona, Senator Morgan offering a substitute providing for a commission to Hawaii with the same powers as those given to the territorial commission of Arizona, the substitute being defeated by a vote of 29 to 15. The Nicaragua canal bill was then taken up and Senator Morgan made a long speech in favor of the project, the bill being finally laid aside without action. The Pacific railroad funding bill was then taken up and Senator Morgan made a long speech against the bill, the bill being finally laid aside without action. The Senate then adjourned.

In the House on the 18th little business was done in either house. The Senate bill was passed fixing the position to discuss the sundry civil bill, the conference report on the Nicaragua canal bill was presented and agreed to, the Senate bill providing for the construction of the canal was then taken up and Mr. Dockery made a long speech against the project, the bill being finally laid aside without action. The Senate bill was then taken up and a conference was asked, giving the House conferees on the bill authority to agree to the Senate amendment providing for a commission to Hawaii, the House then became embarrassed, the question arising from foreign nations because so many commissions were then there.

On the 19th but little business was done in either house. The Senate bill was passed fixing the position to discuss the sundry civil bill, the conference report on the Nicaragua canal bill was agreed to, a short debate ensuing, Senator Daniel opposing the report because it provided for a guarantee of bonds, which had been stricken out by the conferees, the report being finally adopted. The Senate and the House adopted the conference report on the Hawaiian bill providing for a commission to Hawaii, the House then receding from its position that no more commissions should be sent there, the Senate bill providing for the appointment of a commission of five members, three of whom are to be members of the House of Representatives, the commission to report to the next session of Congress. The House then adjourned.

Nothing of importance was done in the 20th, the Senate resumed the World's Fair appropriation bill, the House passed the pay of officers of the army, from the time of the death of Gen. Sherman to the time of the retirement of Gen. Sherman, the same amount appropriated for the pay of officers of the navigation bureau, the Senate bill, however, not being acted upon, the House bill being passed because it was the same as that for the pay of officers of the Treasury. The House then adjourned.

Senator Morgan's bill to provide for the payment of the Treasury to provide notes for the payment of the Treasury to provide for the payment of the Treasury notes, so as not to require gold issues, has been reported from the Senate finance committee with a favorable report, the bill providing that notes in the gold vault be changed to coin, the gold to be used in the payment of the Treasury notes, the Treasury notes being redeemed in silver bullion, the silver bullion being coined into silver dollars, the silver dollars being

The Chicago & West Michigan Extends.

The Great Resources and Bright Prospects of the Cities and Country Between Traverse City and Charlevoix—These Riches to Choose From.

[Grand Rapids Democrat.]

The Chicago & West Michigan Railway Company is making all preparations to extend its line from Traverse City to Charlevoix during the present year, but the route has not yet been decided upon. Three routes are under consideration, one via Elk Rapids, hugging the lake shore very closely, another running east of the cluster of inland lakes and touching Williamsburg and Helena and East Jordan, and a third running directly through the intermediate lake country, and touching Williamsburg and Bellaire, but passing East Jordan to the west. The people of Elk Rapids are very anxious to have the road come their way, and a party of surveyors is now engaged running this line, and the advantages of the route as compared with the others are being seriously considered. Which ever way the road goes it will tap a large stretch of but little developed country of almost unlimited forest and other wealth.

A railroad official, who is personally acquainted with the whole country said to a reporter for the Democrat yesterday: "The majority of the country, through which these surveys have been made is heavily covered with hard wood timber of large size and excellent quality. The clearings for training purposes have been few, but such as there are have good soil and the crops indicate health and strength. In all there is at least twenty years cut of timber for all the factories which the most sanguine expect will be located by reason of the last. If this timber should be cut and shipped in the log just as fast as it would be possible to get it out, both by rail and water, it would last ten years—many say thirteen to twenty. The tendency, however, is not in this direction. The desire seems to be to establish factories as close to the tree as transportation facilities will permit of, and ship our finished product only. Finished hardwood product takes up only half the cubic space of the same quantity of logs, and transportation, will prevent any of it going out that way.

"Many sections of the country are well settled up, even through the woods, miles away from rail or navigable waters. The villages all show signs of vigor and are evidently increasing in population and thrift, as new stores and dwellings indicate. There is no question that this part of the state is among the choicest, and only needs suitable transportation facilities to place it in the van. Its natural advantages consist in a high rolling country, covered with excellent hard wood, dotted everywhere with lakes, large and small, filled with the purest water and stocked with fish of all the kinds known to Michigan. Excellent soil and healthy climate.

"The country on each shore of Torch and Pine lakes, and even smaller lakes, is to a lesser degree, rather abruptly wrom the water's edge. There are a number of points along Torch Lake where the bow of the tugs used by Dexter, Noble & Co. for towing log rafts can be run up on the shore and the water under the stern to form forty to sixty feet. The country between Torch and Elk lakes and betwee . Torch and intermediate lakes rises high in the center, forming a regular backbone. The bulk of the timber in that section lies between Torch and intermediate lakes and southeast of the foot of Torch lake, also north of the crook or "ox-bow" of the intermediate lakes. The timber along the shores of Elk lake, Torch lake and parts of Clam and Grass lakes has been cut off back about one-half mile to one mile to supply wood for charcoal for the Elk Rapids Iron Company. This forms a very small proportion, in considering the whole, and is not noticeable.

"The various routes of survey for the proposed new road through this country show they are well selected with a view to even grades and less timbered lands. Anyone of the three would be quite acceptable in this regard. The entire belt of timber lying between Torch and intermediate Lakes, all that lying south and southeast of Elk and Round Lakes, southeast of Torch Lake, east of Intermediate Lake for a distance of five miles back from the water, also all that which lies between the south Arm of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan and the most of that which lies on both sides of Pine Lake would be tributary to any one of the proposed lines.

"There are sawmills at East Jordan, the head of South Arm, and Boyne City, the head of Pine Lake proper, which according to the record kept from May 15 to September 1, 1890, have shipped out via vessel between seventeen and eighteen million feet of hardwood timber. Messrs. Dexter & Noble, of Elk Rapids claim to have manufactured last year 20,000 tons of iron, two and a half to three million pounds acerate of iron and 150 to 200 barrels of wood alcohol. They sawed up into plank 9,000,000 feet of hardwood timber. The output has been limited by their inability to ship out anything during the five winter months, during which time they must necessarily carry a large stock, which ties up capital, etc. Further than that, having only a water outlet, they are obliged to ship their product in large blocks to ports where the market is very close, inability to ship out by rail has prevented them from attempting to build up an interior trade or a car load trade to any point. They are anxious for the road to pass through Elk Rapids.

"In the lumber trade, as soon as a rail line is put in there, they will make maple flooring, for which there is an excellent demand, but which they have not been able to handle on account of having to ship everything by water. A large traffic in this planed stuff will be built up at Alma, a line of roads through that lumber country. It is a natural sequence and is bound to follow.

"Charlevoix is charmingly located and possesses natural advantages far superior to Petoskey. There is not the least doubt of this point developing into a great summer resort, equalling, if not surpassing, Mackinac Island, and certainly outstripping Petoskey. All this lake country possesses peculiar attractions for lay fever people, who stay until late in the season. Charlevoix had a summer population this last season of 1,200 to 1,500 people in excess of its permanent population. This will grow fast and sure as soon as good rail accommodations are afforded.

"On both sides of Inson lakes, as well as on the Pine lake front, the ground rises quickly from the water and the town is built on terraces or potterys. There are three levels, each about twenty feet above the other. The water is very clear and pure, and Pine Lake affords good bathing facilities. The boating facilities are unexcelled. At no time in the heaviest storm is the water rough on Round Lake, and it requires a hard storm to ruffle the surface even of Pine Lake, which is fifteen miles long and from one to three miles wide.

"There is a large iron furnace at Ironton and East Jordan is a busy manufacturing place. Its peculiar location at the mouth of the Jordan river, where it empties into the south arm of Pine Lake, makes it the natural outlet of all the country tributary to the Jordan and is of a large proportion and cover, d with magnificent timber.

"Since it has become generally known that the Chicago and West Michigan Railway Company contemplate an extension of their road northward from Traverse City to Charlevoix, the towns of Elk Rapids, Bellaire, East Jordan, Ironton and others of lesser note are exceedingly anxious to have the line of railroad pass through their respective places. It will be practically impossible for the road to reach all of them, consequently there is considerable wire-pulling taking place, the outcome of which is being watched with a good deal of interest. The people brought into that section of the country realize that now is their golden opportunity to secure railroad facilities, and one that may not occur again in a long time."

Effects of the McKinley Bill.

[From the American Economist.]

It is too soon to determine the effects of the tariff of 1890 upon all the industries of the country by the results already accomplished. The bill went into operation on October 6, after the business of the year 1890 had closed so far as regards its organization, production and wholesale distribution. If any advantageous effect upon the industries might possibly have been produced, the discouraging influences of the elections in November would have gone far to neutralize or destroy it.

But it is now time for the new law to begin to manifest its benefits, in the enlargement of the field of industry, and by increased activity of production. The coming season will test the law, and prove or disprove the claims of those who advocated it. We have no doubt of the result, and that the friends of the tariff of 1890 will find their justification in the course of events. Already indications of improvement are apparent in the increase of our production of the finest kinds of woolen dress goods; the starting of several factories to make tin plate; the organization of a linen thread mill in the northwest, and many more new enterprises.

The benefits of the bill for agriculture have been recently affirmed by extensive importers among the farmers of the northwest and eastern states. Other indications may be found in the reports of the industrial journals showing imports and exports under the new tariff and in comparison with the data for several preceding years.

One of the loudest cries of the adversaries of the bill was that it would destroy our foreign commerce. It was alleged that our imports would decline and our exports would go to free trade phalanxes, our exports would inevitably fall off.

Sufficient time has elapsed to prove that the effect of the new tariff on foreign commerce will not justify the cavil. It is evident that neither imports nor exports will diminish, but, on the contrary, they will be enlarged under the influence of the tariff of 1890.

The December report of the bureau shows the imports of the month to be the largest in our history. Although the excess over the imports of December, 1888, amounted to more than $20,000,000 dollars, that, in view of the unusual quantity of goods imported during the summer and early fall of 1890, in anticipation of the McKinley bill, it is surprising that the volume of imports in the latter months of the year should have been so unusually large. The accumulation prior to the passage of the bill, this alone would have been a very considerable item, and would have made it impossible for us to compare the imports of 1890 with those of 1889 during the six months ending December 31, 1890, the imports amounted to $742,172,324. During the corresponding period of 1889 they were $738,182,887. For the year 1890 the imports were $827,402,462, and for 1889, $789,310,385.

The new tariff bill, it must be recalled, took many articles of importation from the free list and placed them under the duty schedules. We are confident that it will continue to disappoint them, and that with the growing prosperity of the country our imports will steadily increase. This is in harmony with the tendency the duties, and with experience. These imports will be limited mainly than hitherto to such things as the country does not produce, the new industries will be developed and widened. The larger exports of our manufactures will force a return in such things as we want. The increasing wealth of the nation is creating a greater supply of luxuries, the product of foreign climes or foreign skill, which our own land does not yield or our own workmen have not yet learned to fabricate.

If the tariff has had any marked effects from the McKinley bill, our exports geneerally derive evidence. Those of the year 1890 were the highest for any one month in our history, amounting to $98,436,805, exceeding by nearly $1,000,000 the exports of December, 1889. For the six months ending December 31, 1890, the total exports fell about $20,000,000 behind those for the same period in 1889, but for the whole year of 1890 the exports exceeded those of 1889 by more than $100,000,000, and reached the enormous sum of $857,828,653. It is gratifying to observe in this connection, and to contradict our predictions of the increase of manufactured exports under the new tariff, that the production of cotton, linseed oil, and other products of cotton, increased in December, 1890 than in December, 1889, and the proportion of crude materials exported was less.

We have in previous issues of this paper pointed out that this country has already reached the point where nearly one-half of its exports are manufactures. From this source it may be safely anticipated that the proportion of our exports of crude products will steadily diminish until we shall be known to the world as an exporter of manufactures, and as an importer of crude products. The manufacturers of the world will then contribute to our wealth and give employment to our industries, as for generations they have done for England. But we shall have reached this condition by a policy diametrically opposed to that which England has pursued. Thanks to the American protective system, the American farmer will not have been sacrificed to the American workman degraded for the benefit of either the banker, the importer or the manufacturer. The wages and profits of the farmer and the workman will be maintained or advanced, and the products of the farm and the factory will find their way into the markets of the world, encouraged by that combination of skill and intelligence which is possible only among a people who have reaped the benefits of protection in wages, education and social advancement.

HISTORIC WHITE HOPE.

The Clever Horse by Women Lord Rosebery Took Unknowing.

During September, 1890, I was employed on a construction train on the Pecos River and Rocky Canyon of the New York, Chaseiro & Western Railway, working in conjunction of the Valley Railway, "and so one day assembled in the United States watching for a successful party, when a train came in sight, with a gay, pleasure-seeking party. Among them was a lady, and a wealthy gentleman from the Pecos coast.

Just as he stepped on the platform a handsome young man, apparently about twenty years of age, turned into the same car, and, tossing his valise upon the rack, sat down. Presently he lighted a cigar, and with that carelessness which is characteristic of Californians with limes. Then she began a quiet conversation with him through the grand, ordered a book, and was lost to the world. He all sign passed it up as a case of mistaken identity. The Californian enjoyed the joke immensely.

The conductor called the railway officer, who, while talking about some business and said it was a good joke, suddenly turned to the young man and asked him if he was the horse. He answered in the affirmative, and the officer proceeded to the train, and he took his prisoner out of the car, and myself took a cigar. When we reached Pecos to find that Rosenberg had been "nailed" and that the horse was gone.

Further inquiry developed the fact that the young man was a good young man and very sane among. The gentleman from the Pecos coast, and he was a very different companion in the smoking car, and he said, "Well, I guess I'll tell you how we got the horse. I was in Los Angeles, and was down there, and I supposed it was necessary until I heard: "Look here, if you don't stop that baby for her ticket mean I'll knock you out of the car." I was ashamed and apologized for the nuisance I was making, and I thought I had paid for a ticket, but I guess I hadn't. He settled down to me for hours, and I thought I was entertaining him. I reckon all about farming in California."

It is in truth safe to say that the horse was carried round and disposed of in an American generally brings in a good deal of money. I wrote to Mr. Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, and he advised me to get a clever, handsome horse and have a good time. I acted upon his advice, and I have gain with her every dollar and a week afterward.

Respectfully, Jay Gould.

Gentlemen: The wonderful characteristics of Americanism in "fleet, gait," and "endurance" are well known to Europe for women. I only connote the Pony Express, and the Pacific Railroad, and every time I come to my own country I learn more of my own country. After I had been in Mexico and Europe I returned to this country for the first time in 20 years, and I thought I knew my own country, but now I was still more astonished at the development of the Pacific Coast. I was quite happy in my purchase of the horse, and I have found in Europe, and in the United States, that the horse is a good investment. Yours very truly, ROSEBERY.

Gentlemen: Your favor received, and I am very much pleased with the horse. I have found it a good investment. Yours very truly,

THE LITTLE SHOES.

HUMBLY CHAMPERDAN.

A pair of little shoes,
Standing side by side,
Somewhat worn and old,
And with holes in them,
That I could see as they Peeped out from the folds
Of the ragged mother
That sat by the door.

Yes, and I could tell the stories
Those little shoes could tell
If you gave to them the power
Of speech, and they would tell
Of the angel children
Who had worn them last,
Of the happy footsteps
Of childhood, that had passed
Out of them to music
Of laughter and song
Of the angels who had worn
Those little shoes long Before they had come
To the door of the poor
And had become worn
And old as those I saw
Standing side by side
Upon the door-step
Of the ragged mother
Who sat there and sewed
Patches on the knees
Of her little one's
Only pair of pantaloons.

Yes, and those little shoes
Could tell a story, too,
Of a happy home
Where love used to live
Of a happy home
Where love used to live
Before the angel came
To take from it
Its light and love
And leave in its place
Only the shadow
Of his departure
And the memory
Of his presence.

Those little shoes
Could tell a story
Of a father's love
Strong and true
Of a father who
Had toiled and toiled
To keep those little shoes
Upon the feet
Of his little one
Who had worn them
Out in his service
Who had worn them
Out in his service
Who had worn them
Out in his service

RAILROAD RACKET.

The Matter of Route One of Vexatious Surprises.

The Meeting Last Week Settles the Matter to a Certainty.

The SENTINEL went to press last week during the progress of the D. C. & M. meeting in this village. None of the Grand Rapids officials would give any information, up to that time concerning the route, or other details, and the information we gave our readers was from "deductions" and surface indications.

There seems to be a combination of facts to indicate that the plans of the company had been changed, and that the road would come by the bay-shore. But it now appears that all these circumstances were only a "diversion," for some purpose known only to the general in command. Such things are sometimes necessary in a railroad campaign.

The SENTINEL this week, however, is able to state that the road will come by the Intermediate valley and Bellaire, in accordance with original plans.

At the meeting Wednesday, nearly all the stock of the D. C. & M. was transferred to the C. & W. M. Company, and the following Board of Directors was chosen: Charles M. Heald, Wm. Alden Smith, J. S. V. Agnew, Grand Rapids; T. A. Danson, Henry Newcomb, Boston; James Austin, Grand Rapids; R. M. Cherrie, Chicago; E. J. Meech, Charlevoix; J. E. Howard, U. J. Rogers, Grand Rapids; F. A. Nims, Muskegon.

The meeting adjourned to meet at General Manager Heald's office in Grand Rapids, at which time a president, secretary and treasurer will be elected.

The fact that the "Chicago & North Michigan" company was organized in Grand Rapids recently, seems, in the light of their action here, to mix matters in the minds of the public; but that was only a means to an end. We are given to understand by one supposed to know, that the Grand Rapids organization was perfected and legalized in order that no delay should occur in the event of failure to arrange matters here according to their plans. The Charlevoix organization is the one under which the extension will be made.

Mr. Heald informed the SENTINEL Wednesday, that contracts for the work would be signed before April 1st, and the work begun at both ends as soon thereafter as possible. It is intended that that portion of the road between Charlevoix and Petoskey shall be completed first and trains run on it next summer business. The entire extension will be pushed to completion as rapidly as men and money can do the work. We are informed by reliable authority that tools are already stored at Petoskey, and Thos. Rock is there. He was here with the railroad party last week, and made inquiries concerning what time the frost usually left the ground in the spring. It looks as if the festive old Hibernian was to have his finger in the pie.

The village council held a meeting last week and voted to float the bridge bonds. In accordance with arrangements perfected Wednesday the bonds have been placed in escrow with the National Bank of America, of Chicago.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions were adopted by Baxter Post, G. A. R., at its last regular meeting:

WHEREAS, the Great ruler, before whom all the living must bow, has recently chosen from our ranks Comrade Jacob Bennett, a faithful member of our Post, who served his country and died a soldier, the WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, and who left behind a pall of sorrow over the whole Nation; and

WHEREAS, the Great ruler has seen fit to take from among us the mortal form of his comrade, and yet our loss cheer ourselves in the hope that Jacob is with a number that is "no more to pass out and in" of his tent, from the Eternal Camp-fire, never to be broken, and that he is now at rest in the "Land of Canaan" where we would meet cheerfully do so. Therefore, be it RESOLVED, by Baxter Post No. 116, G. A. R., that our bereaved comrade's family have our sincere sympathy in their sad bereavement, and that we will ever cherish the memory of our departed comrade as one worthy, faithful and other to be appropriately placed. And that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the records of our Post, and a copy thereof be sent to the family of our departed comrade and a copy sent for publication to the Baxter Post.

TIME TO BEGIN.

Reorganize the Charlevoix Improvement Association.

Although the Charlevoix Improvement Association has been inactive for the past three years, it has only been waiting, like Mac-cauber, for something to turn up.

Therefore the undersigned, in the absence of the president, Mr. Byron Beeg, takes the responsibility of calling a meeting of the Association, and all other citizens interested in its work, for Wednesday Evening, March 18.

At the Village Hall, for reorganization, and the inauguration of a campaign of united and earnest work in the interest of Charlevoix The Charlevoix Improvement Association, although hampered by unfavorable circumstances, did good work in its day. What may it not accomplish now, under improved conditions?

Railroads are beneficial to communities only as they are made so by wide-awake and enterprising citizens. Let every citizen dismiss the idea that now the railroad is coming all we have to do is to sit on the fence and see the capitalists tumble over each other in their eagerness to get here.

We must organize and work and now is the time to begin. We hope to see every citizen at the Village Hall Wednesday evening.

BIG MONEY.

Fortunes Made in the Manufacture of Hardwood Furniture.

Capital seeks paying investments. The two conditions necessary to profit in manufacturing are accessibility of the crude material and favorable transportation facilities. In the realm of industry nothing, with the possible exception of mining, yields better dividends than the manufacture of hardwood furniture.

Everybody predicted that the towns and cities along the west shore would die when the lumbering business went away. Muskegon felt the blight, and did the only thing that could be done, namely, got new industries to locate there. Manistee was better fitted to recoup, as the surrounding country was filled with hardwood that could be bought very cheap. This gave the start to the hardwood furniture business, and it has paid.

The Manistee Manufacturing Co. started with $50,000 capital. The first year the new organization paid a dividend of 10 per cent. The East Shore Company was organized to make the cheaper grades of furniture, and has more business than it can do.

The Pentwater hardwood furniture company is a marvel both in its organization and the town's people. It began operation this last year. The plant cost $40,000, and the report for the year shows that it had made $41,000. An enlarged meal is now proposed.

Neither of these points can compare with Charlevoix in advantages for the manufacture of this commodity. Nearly a million feet of hardwood logs will be cut into lumber in the Pine Lake region during the year 1891, to be made up into furniture and agricultural implements elsewhere. Why should not this large outflow of comparatively crude material be checked, and Charlevoix multiplied here? No portion of Michigan is so abundantly supplied with hardwood timber as its northern counties, and the Pine Lake region, and the country tributary to it, has the cream of it.

During this year our inland waters will have direct railroad communication with the leading markets of the Northwest. Our maritime facilities connect us with all lake port markets. We have a harbor cared for by the government, and an inland navigable channel extending fifteen miles in two directions.

There should be a concerted effort on the part of the people of the Pine Lake region to diminish the slab piles and increase the payrolls. Our wealth of material must be made to bring greater returns.

Now is the time to begin the work. Revive the Charlevoix Improvement Association and put into it a spirit of enterprise.

Let us be up and doing!

Norwood Notes.

Our town is still on!

We are going to ride on a railroad.

The shave we don't refer to the hat.

Nash has several teams drawing brick—for the new depot we presume.

Harry Pearl left Monday for Battle Creek.

Just think of walking down to the depot, buying your ticket, hearing the cars whistle and being in Chicago all the same day too.

Nick Sharon got a nice fox Friday. He says he shot it, but we think the dog caught it.

Married Twice.

Joseph Moore and wife, who have been spending the winter in southern Michigan, returned home last week.

Henry Ostrom says we were misquoted in regard to the amount of arrearage he received from the pension department and should have said $4 instead of $8.

W. H. Chew has sold his stock, rented his farm to D. O. Eley, of Horton's Bay, and will move to Cedar Co.

Those school teachers who make a practice of striking children over the head ought to be relegated by the board of school examiners to make driving rather than teaching a little boy in the Burgess district has probably been injured for life by a blow on the head from the teacher in a fit of anger.

An east wind last Sunday cleared the lake of ice. We predict an early spring from the present outlook.

Hayes is "getting to the front." She has never sent any representatives to the legislature, but she has to the penitentiary and that is nearly the same thing. With the advent of the railroad we will want a depot and we think the most advantageous location would be at Col. Hoeft's, as that is half way between Charlevoix and Petoskey, and would accommodate the western part of Emmet county as well as Hayes.

There will be a good demand for maple syrup this spring. It keeps nicely in self sealing glass cans and every farmer in this region has the privilege of making enough for his own use anyway.

One of our Hayesites who spits on his hands in six different languages says he'll be horsewoggled if he can see where the reform is, that was promised by democratic orators during last fall's campaign.

Sealed Proposals.

Will be received by the village clerk of the village of Charlevoix until 4 o'clock p. m., March 12, 1891, for furnishing twenty-five (25) cords of four foot maple wood.

H. S. RAMSDELL, Clerk.

John Seymour and family (?) moved to East Jordan Monday. Adolph Seymour will remain and run the farm.

Dr. D. C. Chamberlain arrived in town from Detroit Wednesday.

A. H. Mosely has been laid up with the grippe for a few days.

Open hand room every Saturday evening, everyone invited. The boys would like to see a full house every time.

The teams that have been away to the woods are all home again.

Amos Richardson last week received back pay amounting to $265, from the government.

Norwood, if a railroad is built from Traverse City to Charlevoix, feel that their chances of getting the road are good, and are ready to do anything necessary to secure it. A survey from Eastport or Charlevoix via Norwood will show a very light grade, no cuts whatever and no further than a line from Eastport across and around the many hills east and north of there. It is a fact, no one denies, very one admits Norwood to be the most pleasant and desirable resort town on Grand Traverse Bay. And when to its resort inducements are added a large lime ledge one-half mile north of here, a valuable slate ledge one-half mile south, a clay bed filled with sparkling aluminum, a metal just beginning to be used in large quantities, and the certainty that iron and other metals are now waiting for the miner, and to this we add we are located in as fine a fruit and farming country as there is in all this region, we feel as we said before, that our chances are good.

A. W. Pearl left Tuesday for a two weeks visit in Battle Creek.

Endless.

Maggie Bezal is very sick with lung fever.

Frank Sheathen was hurt in the woods Tuesday while chopping off a tree when leaned over the road. He was thrown up and came down on his head and shoulder, just missing a log, but his ear caught on the log and was nearly severed from his head. He was insensible nearly half an hour, but received no other serious injury.

Rinaldo Crum and wife are visiting the latter's parents at Bear Lake this week. Mrs. Crum's sister, Miss Lo Jenkins, just returned from Detroit last week, where she has been going to school.

Our friends in Tallapoosa are busy now making garden.

Work will soon begin on the new Traverse Bay resort, known as Traverse Beach.

It is awful cold in the Leland school room whenever it is so cloudy that the sun can't shine through the cracks.

East Jordan Enterprise: The taxes on the fair ground have not been paid yet, and it would seem that something ought to be done about it.

It is reported that Prof. Hansley, of Traverse City, has received the appointment of deputy oil inspector. Prof. Hansley's wife is a cousin of Gov. Winans.

W. H. Eastman, of Antrim county says it's from spite that when the one of his horses, not insured, was killed in a runaway accident and its t. te with a $100 policy on his head escaped without injury.

The Weston iron Furnace of which Mr. R. M. Cherrie is president, was "blown-in" recently at Manistique. As soon as a railroad outlet is secured the furnace at Ironton on Pine Lake will also be blown in.

R. Connable & Sons of Petoskey are cutting ice in front of Bay View, and drawing it to the ice houses with teams. It is much lighter than usual, there being only 11 to 12 inches of which 8 inches is blue ice and the balance snow.

Our northern towns with railroad prospects will do well to heed the following excellent advice from the Indiana Times: "Property is fictitious especially vacant lots, should not be held too high. A reasonable price will find purchasers and double the population of our village, while exorbitant figures will prevent transfers and drive settlers elsewhere."

Petoskey Herald: The contract for the re-building of the opera house has been let to Mr. Barnes, and work will be rushed so as to have the house ready for use about May 15th. The plans contemplate the following changes: The stage will be enlarged in depth six feet and the curtain opening will be two feet wider and much higher. The whole stage will be raised one foot. There will be a line of comfortable dressing rooms across the rear of the stage and a large property room above them. The auditorium will be 10 feet wider, with a balcony circle around the whole room; altogether 800 can be comfortably seated. In addition to the main entrance in the center, there will be two additional exits, one on each side, and the house can be quickly emptied. There will be six stage boxes on each side or twelve in all and when completed we shall have a very comfortable and pleasant little theatre.

—Sylver Falls Forest is green, by the way, and is fast losing its hold on the lumber state, the forests are the north end of the county can be not long before the last tree will be cut. Lumbering is a thing of the past in this county. Lumbermen are now turning their attention to other fields, and the time is not far distant when there will be no more lumber to cut. The lumber business has been the mainstay of this county for years, and it will be a sad day for the county when the last tree is cut. But it is a fact that it is coming, and we must prepare for it. Our farmers are doing so, and the time is not far distant when the county will be dotted with farms, and the farmers will be the mainstay of the county. Let us be prepared for the change.

STUDENTS BURNED ALIVE.

Fatal Fire in a North Carolina School-House—Two Deaths.

Fifty was threatened in the Mount Ida (N. Y.) High School. The students were at once greeted with Thomas Paine hornets, of Little Rock, Ark., and Albert Hart, of Rock Mill N. C., perished in the flames. At the first alarm the young ladies, who roomed on the ground floor, made their escape. The young men roomed on the third floor, and while the alarm reached them the means of escape were partially cut off. Hart Hawkins managed to escape after leaping from a second story window, and was badly burned about the face and arms. Thomas Zumbrunner, a student, was found in the school room by two men, carrying in his hand what looked like a valise containing his effects, but he was overcome by the smoke and died in the school house. Hart was carried into the school house and died there. Zumbrunner's home was in Lyons, Ill. Hart's home was in Rock Mill, N. C. Hart's father was a prominent Baptist and Sunday school worker.

WOULD HANG THE REGISTER.

Nine Oklahoma Friends Indorsed that She Shall Have Her Office.

If the voters could have given votes in the old county officials—Republicans and the newly elected Democratic Farmers' Alliance—Judge Green decided that the old officials should retain their offices, books and papers in the town. Mrs. Lucy Gaston, the wife of the Farmers' Alliance in the office of Register of Deeds, and who had spoken the County Commissioners and the magnificent sum of $1,000 for their records, etc. The Commissioners—a Republican majority—decided that the register be comply with her demand. Mrs. Gaston's friends became indignant and one of them called for a rope. As her friends agreed that Judge Green's hanging of she were kept out of office.

WESTERN HAPPENINGS.

Indescribable Horrors.

Mrs. Mary Jurmann, wife of a newspaper man, of Los Angeles, Cal., was dressing her twenty-year-old daughter for a ball, when her daughter fell dead at her feet. Physicians ascribed the death to heart disease.

Wife Slayer Is Sent with the Infinite.

Tom Hazledine, Pa., reported miners are improving. The company is seeking a settlement with all disorder ceased.

EASTERN OCCURRENCES.

At Huntingdon, Pa., Mrs. Curtin's Bear was sitting by a window sewing when she heard a sharp, ringing noise, and felt a tug at her hair at the back of her head. In the cell of her head's hair, and lying against the wall, from which it had separated a lock of hair over the roots, by a flattened bullet that had not even broken the skin.

At Philadelphia, the weavers at Dobson Plush Mills have struck because of the refusal of the firm to grant them a 15 per cent. increase in wages. Unless an agreement is effected, over one thousand hands will be thrown out of employment.

At New London, Conn., the tidal ship of the Sandoval Dismantling was unsuccessful. An accident to one of the hawsers caused the steam to delay.

This big mine was outdoors, operated by A. Tallier, at Ashland, Pa., ceased for an indefinite period. This stoppage will cause a loss of many lives.

John Gorrando, a wealthy stone-keeper of Paterson, Pa., fatally shot his wife and then tried to kill his two children and himself, but was prevented by the neighbors from carrying his design into effect. Gorrando is 32 years of age, and about a year ago he showed symptoms of insanity. Gorrando is a native of Italy.

The New York committee having in charge the raising of a fund for the widow of the late Hon. William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury, have received subscriptions amounting to $30,000. It is the intention of the committee to raise $50,000 more during the next few days, and then a fund of $100,000 will be given to Mrs. Windom at an early date.

The fast has been made public that the young ladies, who roomed on the ground floor, made their escape. The young men roomed on the third floor, and while the alarm reached them the means of escape were partially cut off. Hart Hawkins managed to escape after leaping from a second story window, and was badly burned about the face and arms. SPEMIAK SAYS ITS SO.

RUSSIANS ARE BANISHED WITHOUT CAUSE.

Very Few Are Given a Trial, and Most Are Deported by Order of Governor Tiulin—Instigation or the Nature of Their Offense.

Sergius Stepniak, who is a nihilist in Russia but not in the United States, is now lecturing in this country and has recently spoken in Chicago, St. Paul and Milwaukee.

The great question in Russia to-day, he says, is the three-cornered land question and solidarity a constitutional monarchy, the same as that found in Italy, England and all European countries except Turkey. This movement begins in Russia now from a religious spirit than a political one. Russia to-day is just through a period of change in what Finnoc passed through before its great revolution. Millions in Russia whose slavery and earnest as a general rule to their work for a better government are compelled to submit to the most atrocious suffering from the heavy penalties inflicted upon them by public opinion.

The speaker, in a recent lecture, gave a detail the manner of organizing nihilist societies among the workingmen. Nihilism, he said, was considered violent at first. The societies heard between the State and people and made their demands for their educational benefit. The ideas of better government were seen, but quietly. There was nothing political in the nihilists. It was a social movement in the full sense of the word. Nihilism, he said, was considered violent at first. Officers of the government, seeing the detail of the ideas taught by the Nihilists, soon began to arrest them on charges of organizing revolutionary societies dangerous to the State and society. The prisoners were sentenced to ten, twelve and fifteen years in Siberia. The speaker told of his own arrest with three others, and of his trial before a military tribunal. He said the prisoners were allowed to employ lawyers, who were called upon to defend the prisoners. The speaker said the lawyers were very eloquent in their appeals to the tribunal, and Cadillac News: The Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregational pastors of the city are taking the initiatory steps looking to the engagement of Harry Sayles, the "singing Evangelist," to conduct a series of revival meetings in Cadillac sometime soon.

Adam Simons, of Chebeygan, accidentally shot himself lately while hunting for a bear he had wounded the day before with an ax, after taking two cobs from her. Whole families go let the gun drop by his side, when it was discharged, the contents lodging in his side and shoulder. His condition is precarious.

The old settlers' meeting at Elk Rapids recently was largely attended and was a success in every way. The officers for the ensuing year are President, J. O. Hoadgood; vice presidents, John McDonald and Alex Campbell; historians, S. H. Spencer and O. J. Powers; recording secretary, J. J. McLaughlin, treasurer, John Doboy.

There is a probability that more fishing will be done in Grand Traverse Bay from Northport this season than ever before. In addition to the regular quota of fishermen who make their homes there, and the large number from Leelanau and the large key, entered doing, the Schriver Bros. will be there with their tug, and six other gangs of poined net fishermen from Saugatuck have announced their intention of being there. They will make a fleet of three tugs and about a score of smaller craft.

East Jordan Enterprise: The Methodists of Deviine will erect a church on Clark's corners the coming summer that will cost one thousand dollars.——The hoop factory started Monday with a full complement of hands. Twenty men and seven girls are required to keep the thing hooping properly.——Harvey Porter has purchased forty acres on Pine Creek above the Elmira siding and intends to build a two story grist mill there. He has part of the material on the ground, and will begin work on the building as soon as spring opens. He expects to have it ready for new grain right after harvest. He has one year born, two mortgers, brush and magnet, and other machinery already here, and more will arrive when navigation opens. He has made arrangements to have the timber for the building and dam all delivered on the snow, so no delay will be experienced.

The startling developments made at Lansing in regard to Charles Priddinder, the Democratic Senator who occupies the seat stolen from R. C. Morse, are of Northern Michigan interest. In 1850 Priddinder married the daughter of Chief Petosky at Harbor Springs. Two children were the fruits of the marriage, one died in infancy the second, William Henry Priddinder is yet living. Tuesday attorneys Dart and Duel, of Emmet county, accompanied by wife No. 1 appeared on the scene at Lansing and confronted the much married senator and receiver of the stolen seat. Priddinder does not deny the marriage, but says that when he married his second wife he supposed the first to be dead. He does not explain why after the war closed he did not return to Emmet county and try and find his wife and son. It looks very much as if he had tired of his dusky bride, who it is claimed was quite handsome when married and still retains much of her beauty. It is also claimed that he came to Detroit on a furlough during the war and was so near as he sought his wife and son. Further it is alleged he told so plausible a story that he did in Detroit at that time, that he did not intend to return to his squaw bride. The polygamous senator will undoubtedly be arrested for bigamy. This will leave his seat vacant and put the opposition in the Democratic ranks one more. The Democrat senators threaten to leave the state to prevent any business being transacted for four days may be called to an account for their disreputable steal of two senatorial seats. There are several citizens of Charlevoix who are convenant with all the circumstances of Priddinder's first marriage. Richard Cooper knows him well. Priddinder was in Mr. Cooper's employ at the time, and John Pepinaw was present at the marriage.

Two men have found near Fresno, Cal., what is claimed to be a genuine petrified body of a man. It is remarkably well preserved and even the hair on the back of the head are visible. The head is of a good-size and features of Caucasian type. The body measures nearly seven feet in length.

A Newark congregation, wishing to get rid of an obnoxious pastor, hit upon the dastardly scheme of giving him a donation party, but the plucky shepherd pulled a gun upon the crowd, and laughed long and hard to see his sheep fling through the woods, dropping baskets and bundles on the way.

The Empress of Russia is now 46 years old. Residents say she has not the majesty of the Princess of Wales at her coronation, but looks more than her years. The elite begins to double, and the cheeks have long ago taken a comfortable expression. Her figure has grown maternal, though still she is an indefatigable dancer.

General Wade Hampton's father was probably the largest slave-holder in the south before the war. His plantations were situated principally in Mississippi. Wade Hampton inherited these estates, and was very wealthy before the outbreak of hostilities, but since the close of the war he has depended to a large extent upon his salary as a public official.

One of the interesting men of Canada is Dr. Oronhyatekha, of Toronto. He is an Indian who in his youth was chief of the Mohawks. The prince of Wales urged him to go to England to be educated at the royal expense, and he was subsequently graduated from Oxford and from a London medical school. He is a good-looking, broad shouldered six footer.

Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague is hard at work on that much-talked-of life of her father. She is still young-looking, and with her magnificent manner, taste in dress, and brilliant conversational powers, a decided favorite in society. Meanwhile her, Sprague vegetates at Cumnoor, and is happiest when, treading her mazy, exercising for the last time Home-Sweet-Home.

The Hon. Dawsey Hutridge of the Savannah Times was recently placed in a position where he showed that he is a gallant gentleman of the old school. It seems that a lady friend of his, who is an accomplished lady, and moves in the highest circles, was in the habit of using a certain brand of tea, which she found very refreshing, and which she had been in the habit of using for some time. "Up to manhood and womanhood,
Then I pass it, and then I look back
On a wilderness stretching Behind me, all black,

And I think of valleys and meadows
Through which I have wandered in youth,
I will meet my whole life over there
Before the judgment tribunal of truth.

And I think of valleys so sunlight
Through which I have passed, and I think
Of the times, those kindnesses,
Those words so full of love and of drink.

Oh, nearer now! for the hard things
I would give a dipper full of water,
But I cannot find my brother,
Oh! I want a word.

I can only press the starwort,
And let my lips kiss the sod,
Wait my brothers now and like
With my brothers in God.

Wait with the strength in alarm
Wait from the anthem of hope
To hearing long they pay,
Long ago in the day.

So in brotherhood and in dreamland
Erin, my Motherland,
Wait for the word which I carry
In a broad spring.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXVIII—Continued.

"Rodolphe, my Rodolphe! wake, for I am in great trouble! Rodolphe! wake, for we are ruined! Rodolphe! wake, for I have a terrible secret to tell you!"

"What is it? what is it?" he cried, sitting up in a state of bewildered amazement, and rubbing his eyes with the back of his hand.

"Oh, Rodolphe! I have—I have—I have married Dr. Elfenstein!"

"Married Dr. Elfenstein! Nonsense, Ida! you are dreaming!"

"Oh, no! I am not dreaming! I married Dr. Elfenstein yesterday morning! Oh, Rodolphe! what shall we do? what will become of us?"

"Married Dr. Elfenstein! Nonsense, I say! Why, I saw you with my own eyes, after the ceremony, in the library, taking leave of your husband!"

"Yes, I did—I did! I was obliged to do that! I was obliged to do everything he ordered me! Oh, Rodolphe! I am his wife! I am his wife! I am his wife! I am his wife!"

"Nonsense, nonsense, child! I tell you I saw you with my own eyes, after the ceremony, in the library, taking leave of your husband!"

"Oh, I do! I do! I did! I did! I did

CHARLEVOIX, MARCH 18, 1891.

WE OBSERVE

That We Are Getting Too Much of One Thing in the Way of Outside Advertising.

Mince Pie Is a Good Thing to Have in the Family, But We Want More "Hog and Hominy."

Apropos of the coming extension of the C. & W. M. from Traverse City to Charlevoix, we note that the State press, particularly the Grand Rapids papers, say some kind things of Charlevoix, but the burden of their song and dance is that Charlevoix is a famous resort town, and that with railroad communication it will eclipse all its rivals.

This is all true, and we are proud of it. Charlevoix is all that is claimed for it as a summer resort, and we want more summer visitors. The more that come the better we are pleased.

But we are becoming weary of hearing a story twelve months in the year that is of interest to us but three. Charlevoix may increase its summer population four-fold and not increase its permanent population fifty souls. Residents of Charlevoix—those who summer and winter here—do not consider it selfishness to desire a winter prosperity in addition to a summer activity. And, on the other hand, we do not believe our summer friends can justly blame us for wishing to place our town on a more permanent and substantial basis of growth than can possibly come to a purely summer watering place.

Charlevoix has something beside beautiful scenery, elegant climate and superior yachting-courses upon which to base its hopes of paved streets and electric lights. It has all that is essential to commercial prosperity.

It objects to having the greater elements of its importance obscured by the lesser. We cannot see why ephemeral benefits should cause us to lose sight of the greater and grander possibilities within our reach. It is time for Charlevoix to work out of the beaten path it has been treading these many years, and seek new fields.

We shall continue to hold up Charlevoix as the most beautiful summer resort in Michigan, and extend every inducement to summer visitors. But we shall also seek to attract here that class of business enterprises that will give our town a marine, commercial and manufacturing importance; and in so doing we shall be careful not to let one infringe upon the domain of the other.

But we serve notice of protest in this matter of being classed as a community that is compelled to subsist nine months of the year upon what it can make the balance of it, as they do at Mackinac Island and Long Branch. This is only a stale joke of our suburban exchanges, of which we are very, very tired.

We shall bend our energies toward making Charlevoix something more than a summer-blossoming geranium, that has to be put under cover as soon as the autumn frosts come, not forgetting our good summer friends, and in all things so prosecuting our work that we shall retain their good will.

R R REFLECTIONS.

The Shore Survey—What the C. & W. M. is Doing —Other R. R. News.

General Manager Heald, of the C. & W. M., is in Boston, talking Charlevoix extension with the Directors.

Grand Rapids Telegram-Herald: The C. & W. M. engineers office is very busy now, preparing for the Charlevoix extension.

President Albert F. Mason and Trustee John Burns went to Grand Rapids and Chicago Thursday, with the Charlevoix railroad-bridge bonds.

East Jordan is making the supreme effort of her life to induce the C. & W. M. to meander around by way of the head of the Arm. Well, "Barks is willin."

The Telegram-Herald says that preparations for the Charlevoix extension are about completed, and that an option has been secured for an entrance into Petoskey and a depot site.

Among the articles of association filed at Lansing recently were those of the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Mackinac Ry. Co., capital stock $5,000,000. This is the proposed line from Marion, near Cadillac, to the straits.

Engineer Northrup, of the C. & W. M. force, arrived here Wednesday, in advance of his corps. A survey of a shore route is being made, the purpose of which is none of our business. Meanwhile, Bellaire reports normal respiration, and temperature, and Dr. Leavitt is busy scenting right-of-way.

Grand Rapids Democrat: General Manager Heald, of the C. & W. M. and the D. L. & N., is quietly enjoying those lines to meet the increasing traffic, which promises, with a view to the heavy traffic certain to result from the World's Fair. Up to within a very short time, the traffic of these roads has been operated with a comparatively cheap and out-of-date outfit. The increase of traffic, competition and the introduction of fast trains, have necessitated large and more modern coaches and cars, more powerful engines, and general improvement in the lines. Last December four heavy locomotives were added to the equipment, and yesterday two powerful forty-five ton passenger engines were received. These two are for the Grand Rapids-Chicago line, and are the largest engines running into Grand Rapids. In addition to these, fifteen new cars for passenger service have been added. All of the cars will be sixty feet long, and equipped with all latest improvements. Another fifty-foot coach is being built in the shops at Ionia, and another 45-ton locomotive has just been started at the Muskegon shops. Probably still more equipment will be added when the road's extension is completed to Charlevoix.

EASTER OPENING 1891.

Of choice millinery, pattern hats and bonnets, straw goods, flowers, ribbons, latest novelties, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, March 25, 26 and 27. I shall be pleased to see all my customers, and the trade in general, on those days I will take pleasure in showing the finest display of millinery ever shown in Charlevoix. Thanking you for past favor, I solicit a share of your future trade.

The horse steeling case of the people vs Lewis Linnie and Alfred Bitchelow was dismissed in the Antrim county circuit court last week.

THE SAILORS.

Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

The steamer Tavon will run this season between Cheboygan and the Soo.

Capt. H. N. Viving will run the steamer Crescent again this season, and Mike Linsey will go as engineer.

Capt. Emory is fitting out the steamer Cummings, and is painting her. Chas. Noyes has been engaged as engineer.

The fishing tug Minnie Warren worked through the ice to Nicholas dock Monday, and is ready for business.

The steamer Clara Bell is being fitted out for the fishing business. Her after-cabin has been removed, and the pilot-house lowered to the main deck. She will set her outfit of nets this week.

Petoskey Review: Capt. Crosby is negotiating for the skater, a new and handsome boat about the size of the Friant. She has a fore and aft compound engine, and will tow the Friant to keep out of her way.

Mr. Seymour, of the steamer Petoskey, was in town last week, arranging matters with his local agent. The Petoskey will start out about April 1st, officered the same as last year, and with about the same time table.

The steamer Onekema will not go on the Bayne City route as last been stated. She will make a route between Suttons Bay and Fife Rapids, taking in Omena and Old Mission. Capt. Dave Parish will sail her.

The Northern Michigan line folks have changed their Chicago warehouse and dock from Market street to the head of Michigan Street, at the foot of Michigan street. The docks will have better facilities in the new quarters.

Hastings From Hayes.

I. Stauffer has purchased the Kansine farm on the county line and will see that the C. & W. M. put a station at that point. It is now the Triple Hook town site, Hooks Swan Triplett Aspinas and Big-mile Dave Hewett. We understand that Mr. Stauffer will put in a hardwood business, literary at that point. E. B. Sly will increase his lime manufacture and the railroad will no doubt give them a station.

Mr. Lehmer, of Carpenter, came near losing his horse a few days since. It fell down in a hole, and was found in the roof before the flames were extinguished.

Clarence Hewitt has been raising Ned o' nights from the effects of a fusion on his hand.

Mrs. Lotti Murray and her mother, Mrs. Sarah Compton, who have been spending several weeks at St. Joseph, will be home in a few days.

Several of our Hayesites attended the sale of cows at Petoskey last Thursday, but none bought purchasers. It was the unanimous opinion that they were a poor lot of "critters" and would not do well on our rich feed.

Mr. O'Leary, father of Mrs. Swan, came Friday to visit his daughter. He is a fine-look gentleman and quite spare, dead in the shoulders and couple.

Five minutes out in the size of a pole of tamarack on Hayes River some of Frank's men found a "bear cub," which he have visited here, say it is the largest pole of timber they ever saw in the woods.

The farmers are about finished up from their sales. The "Yankees" got in nearly $4,000, have written up and gone back to their farm in Elkhart.

Mrs. Gardner has recovered from a protracted siege of la grippe.

Our doctors are on the fly.

Elder Hoskins and wife drove to Traverse City last Thursday.

The dressmakers are so hot at the mention that they may forget to cool the lake.

Members of the White family of this place, were joined by the following relatives from Ithaca Centre, Ont., on Saturday morning: Mr. George White, who has closed out his business in Ontario and is prospecting and seeking improved health; the Misses Jennie, Louisa, Maggie and Ida, who are on a visit to their brothers and sister for a short time, when they will go to Petoskey where they will remain. Mrs. Thos. White and three children joins her husband who is in the employ of Wilson & Co., to remain permanently; Mrs. White, mother of the brothers and sisters mentioned above, and of Wm. H., James, Arthur and Miss Eliza, who have long made their home here, accompanies the party and will spend some time here before joining her daughters in Petoskey.

THE REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS recorded in the Register of Deeds' office for the week ending March 16, are as follows:

It is in two volumes and embraces a full history of Stanley's last expedition. No book is more worthy of a place in our libraries.

The Kalkaskian presents a rather gloomy and discouraging view of Kalkaska. It says the place is dead, property depreciating, people moving away and everything as blue as well can be.

A WAIF.

An Infant of the Female Persuasion Found in the Storm-House of a Charlevoix Residence.

On Monday evening about ten o'clock, Mr. Elmore Mudge, of this village was sitting with his wife in a back room of their residence, when Mr. Mudge had occasion to enter the front room. He was surprised to hear a baby's cry outside the front door. He stepped to the door and discovered in the storm-house a basket containing infant clothing, and in a corner wrapped warmly in two shawls and neatly dressed, was a healthy girl baby.

In the basket was a note stating that the child was born Jan. 15, and that its name was "Nellie Gertrude." Mr. Mudge took his prize to his astonished wife, and it is being cared for by her.

At first they were a little "hot in the collar," last just evening Mr. Mudge thought they would keep the little waif. As they have no children the child will have a good home.

The clothing left with the child was ample and of good quality.

It is a mystery for some one to solve.

—Charlevoix has lost a landmark. The palatial mansion of H. F. Bishop, on Mason street, has been taken down in sections, and removed elsewhere. The residence has long been a striking architectural object—combining the Etruscan with the Gothic, and now and then a suggestion of Queen Elizabeth, with an effect at the remotest. It has brought much to mind on ups.

WADING IN THE BROOK.

At your age, my boy, I also, thinkest thou, could wade a brook with ease? Time and I agree in opinion. Wading in the brook.

Hitch and unhitch in the morning, stumbling at every rock or root; Stubbed my toe, and pitched headlong, Laughing the world other laughter than now.

When the brook was low, you know, I could wade it, and not care. Now the brook is high, and I Merely splashed and dodged hopelessly. Wading in the brook.

After chasm, and clear copper, After a vein of silver, I have followed the delight of the hunter Through the brook, and beyond. Wading in the brook.

Pain is dead now—dear I say, darling! Pain went stabbed, all the while Ay, and sorrow, dear little darling! Wading in the brook.

Do little stuffy, stifling city, Noisy streets and crowded rooms, Give me a piece of summer weather, Wading in the brook.

A "MONSTER" OF ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

How Locality Was Terrified by an Eccentric Gentleman with a Knife. The Curiosity's Comments and the Final Capture of the Monster.

"T was just a century ago that London had its wonder the most distinguished predecessor of "Jack the Ripper." Ashton's "Old Times" contains a curious account of "Monster Hughes," in eighteen pages and comments from the newspapers of the day and illustrations from the curiosities of the period.

In the early spring of 1790 mariners begun to be seen in London having the hacked and mutilated by "a monster in human form." The monster was seen at first and "monster" was printed with a small "m," but very shortly the type grew into a roar, and no capitals were small enough to hold the word. Small m or large m, the "Fiend" Mr. MONSTER, Ashton says, "Mr. Smith had been stabbed in the night by a man in a long Frock, who had run away from him." Indeed, before that, as far back as May, 1788, a Mrs. Smith had been stabbed in the same part of her thigh by a man in a Frock. Other women were stabbed and had their clothes cut, and a much publicity, excitement and indignation was expended. The monster was at first the imitation of "Jack the Ripper" and "Jack the Slabber." Other cases, however, was soon established little resembling in age and sex from a drawing-room at St. James.

Mr. John Julius Angerstein, whose name will be associated with the beginning of the National Gallery, was very active and opened a subscription at Lloyd's—to which the gentlemen showed generosity—for the capture and correction of "The Monster." The prince began to frolic themselves, and then, too, seized pleasantly on the merits as a type of all.

High Time It Was Done.

One of the grievances of the free trade advocates against the new tariff on tin plate is that the Welsh manufacturers anticipated the duty on that article by marking up the price of their goods, to get the benefit of the increased demand for them after the tariff went into effect. In the words of one free trade grumbler:

"They were not mistaken. The packers and canners ordered large supplies. They kept on doing so, and the Welsh manufacturers raised the price again, till they asked $4.75 for the box of tin plate for which they used to charge $3. It cost the manufacturers no more to turn out their product, wages were no higher, and the price of sheet steel did not go up. Some of their materials were a little cheaper. They pocketed the entire advance, and the American consumers paid it to amuse Mr. McKinley.

The Welshmen began to advance their prices about July 1. Between that date and July 1 next there will have been sent to this country over 5,000,000 boxes of tin plate, for which the American consumers will have paid at least $5,000,000 more than they would have done had there been no McKinley bill. The Welsh manufacturers got it all."

But this is by no means the first time that the Welshmen have made off on their price of their goods. Since 1886 they have made three advances, taking over $15,000,000 from the pockets of the American people. This was long before the McKinley bill was dreamed of; so that the McKinley bill was not needed to show the American people that they are at the absolute mercy of the Welsh tinplate makers.

It is the object and purpose of the new tariff on tin plate to deliver the people of the United States from this dependence. Within five years, if the duty is not removed, the demand for tin plate in this country will be largely filled by American manufacturers, and they will not have a monopoly, as the price of the Welshmen. On the contrary, the foreign manufacturers announce it to be their intention to sell their goods in this market at any price the American makers will, paying the duty themselves in order to retain as much of the market as the home manufacturers will permit.

Their willingness to pay the duty, rather than abandon the field, shows the enormous profits they have been making off their American consumers. The case with which they have been able to advance prices demonstrates beyond question the expediency of the new tariff and its management of American manufacturers. Detroit Journal.

A report comes to the ominous of power in the state senate. If the former legislature was a "Hawk-bank," how would it do to call this one a "squaw-buck?"—Holland Republican.

The inconsistency of the Democrats pleading for votes for Judge Champlin on the ground that a judicial office should not be made partisan, is clearly shown by the action of the same party in Saginaw. The about members of the bar in that county, irrespective of politics, asked for the re-nomination of Judge Edgar, who has filled the position of Circuit Judge ably and impartially, but who is a Republican. He was nominated by the Republicans as requested by the bar, but the Democratic wire pullers, contrary to the advice of the leading Democratic lawyers of the county, called a convention and placed in nomination a partisan Democrat, for the position.

The Democratic state convention having endorsed the disreputable steal of two seats in the Senate and Judge Champlin, in his speech accepting the nomination, having endorsed the Democratic state platform it comes with bad grace for the Democrats to set up the plea of non-partisanship in the election of justices of the supreme court, even if their actions heretofore have been consistent with their latter day professions, which every intelligent person knows is not the case. The only reason so few Democrats have been elected to the supreme bench in Michigan is they did not poll enough votes. The Democrats voted as solid for Dodd as in any other instance but Minnigan was a Republican state.

The Bellaire Improvement Association grows apace. At its business meeting Friday evening, Mr. Leavitt, who has had several interviews with General Manager Heald, and has attended several railroad meetings at which that official was present, gave an interesting talk and placed the railroad situation before the association as it now is, which is highly satisfactory and the people can be positively assured that the road will be built through Spencer Creek, Bellaire and Central Lake to Charlevoix this summer, if the people do by it as they did by the D. C. & E. All that remains to be done is to secure the right-of-way from Williamsburg to Kiswaketh. If this is done we get the road, if not, we don't. Bruce.

Macedonian Herald: The larceny case from East Jordan, generally known as the horse stealing case, were disposed of as follows: The defendant Nichols demanded a separate trial. Then moved for a continuance—all of which was granted. The defendant Linnie having no attorney and no money, the court appointed one for him. His witnesses were ordered subpoenaed at the expense of the people. He demanded a trial at once. The prosecuting attorney moved for a continuance of the case as there was no probability that the witnesses would be found, living at Central Lake, East Jordan and Boyne City. He also stated that the people desired to put Nicholas on trial first. The case was then continued. A motion was then made to discharge the defendant on the ground that the return of the justice did not show any testimony tending to show any intention on the part of Linnie to steal, but did show that the horses had just previously belonged to him and as the trade of them was made on Sunday, he was acting under the advice of Lawyer Fogg—that they were still his and that he could take them anywhere he should find them, peacefully if possible, or by replevin. Mr. Fogg was present and vigorously sustained the advice and its correctness and as warmly replied to some mysterious remarks of the prosecutor which he claimed could be aimed at no one but himself. The court sustained the motion to quash proceedings and dismiss defendant, stating that if Mr. Fogg would save that he advised them that they could take the horses and they believed and acted on that advice, it ended the case. Fogg then made the same motion in the Nicholas case, which was granted. So ended the heralded horse stealing proceedings—a flash in the pan and hardly a respectable flash at that.

The Lansing correspondent of the Detroit Free Press says that Senator Crocker, attorney for Senator Pridgeon, says that if any proceedings should be begun against Mr. Pridgeon, attorneys Dodd and Dart would be at once arrested for endeavoring to compound a felony and attempting to extort money to settle a criminal case. Papers are already prepared to begin proceedings. The papers are not signed as yet, but are ready for official signature, and will be served the moment attorneys Dodd and Dart attempt anything further.

MEN SHOT IN BATTLE.

Singular Experience of Soldiers Hit in Action—Notes at Belaklava—Hooker at Antietam.

After a man is shot in battle, between the thigh and the scapulae, whether dead or prolonged suffering, what are his symptoms; what his emotions feelings and emotions?

A remarkable instance was offered in the case of Captain Nolan, of Balaklava. Nolan assumed to guide the Light Brigade in charge, and with frantic exclamation and gestures with his uplifted sword he rode in the right to obtain the Six Hundred out of the Valley of Death, which by directly in their course toward the line of artillerists which they had been ordered to attack, and where victory and not disaster distinctly awaited them. When he was a few paces to the right of the leading ranks a piece of wind struck him on the chest, tearing into the heart.

"The sword dropped from his hand," says Kinglake, "but for an instant which he was waving it the mortal hollow remained high uplifted in the air, and the grip of the practiced horseman remaining as yet unrelaxed will left him firm in his saddle. Missing the perfect hand of his master, and finding the accustomed governance now succeeded by the dangling reins, the horse all at once wheeled about and began to gallop back upon the front of the advanced brigade. Then, from what had been Nolan—and his form was still erect in the saddle, his sword arm still high in the air—there burst forth a cry as strange and appalling that the hearers who rode nearest him call it unearthly. And in truth I imagine," continued the historian, "the sound resulted from no human will, but rather from those spasmodic forces which may act upon the bodily frame when life as a power has ceased. The first scatter of the wind, arm up lifted and stiff, could hardly be ranked with the living. The shock upon the heart rending the air was scarce other than the shriek of a corpse. The dead horseman rode on till he passed through the interval of the Twelfth Light Dragoons. There at last he dropped out of the saddle."

He lies between Nolan living and Nolan dead was very narrow, yet the uplifted arm and the battle shout ringing in an unearthly yell proved that the soul of the warrior dominated every element of activity, so long as any was left remained. Had Nolan been riding along in the ranks of the 5th Hussars with no other thought than that of keeping in line and getting ahead, he might have gone on the charge with a bullet under that blow.

An experience of the same nature, but at the other extreme, was that of General Joseph Hooker at Antietam. On the morning of the 17th of September, being in the vicinity of the enemy with his corps, he began a movement to write high ground on his front and was struck while in profound ignorance of the Confederate line behind a strong body of insane bullets. Such a strong body of the enemy showed intent to his pathway, and in the excitement of making new dispositions and rolling and pitching the Confederates, the General, to use his own language, "was jilted in the shoulder." "The whole morning had been one of unusual animation with me," he wrote, "and I had, at the end of the successful attack he was removed from his saddle just as he was in the act of falling from it, weakened by the loss of blood from a wound of which we had not been conscious at all. I, as I understand, had passed directly through the foot between the muscles of the arch and the sole, the seat as every one knows, of very sensitive nerves. But the General, seen in a state of moderate repose, as for instance, quietly writing the execution of some movement, he also would have seemed but a prey to the moment at least, inconsiderate of everything but the sword waving a national flag. For many days after the battle—vivid, Wagner."

One day so uncommonly great crowd stood in and about the depot waiting for the arrival of the train. Now the ranks of the cars was heard in the distance. The crowd was seen to part from the among the crowd and rush along the line of the train, the flag and gesticulating with his sword, at the same time in a high pitch, shouting and yelling as a lunatic. The general stepped from the train, and shook hands, and quickly, as soon as possible, the general's order, rode to a hotel.

"The general stood his standing with our regiment," said one.

"What's the matter?" inquired the other. "Why, he came without a blistering clearance."

"Well," the other replied the general, "I have bought and vanquished lions, and I have slept in the lion's cage, but I never was in a place before where I was afraid to sleep."

Editors's Sound Advice.

It is the bitter fings that cause the most anguish to man's character, things petty and mean, things which are so little as to be almost unnoticed, Any sense may learn to bear a great sorrow, but who knows how he is accustomed to spend his cold water in the morning?

For the same reason there is no little thing which is so annoying as a flea in bed. According to the story, a man who was troubled in vain to find the source exercised, and in the morning he called his wife and family to a solemn prayer, the burden of which was that the flea might be found, upon which he was in excitement, when silent for a moment, and then with a voice of thunder, he cried out, "Forever, O Lord, forever

The boys had a dispute with Ingersoll over the price of some coffee and the family was poisoned. THE NEW COUNCIL.

Inaugural Address of President Buttars.

The new Village Council met on Friday evening, and President Buttars addressed the Council in the following words:

"The general law defining the powers and duties of incorporated villages and their officers, provides that the President shall, from time to time, give the council information, and recommend such measures as he may deem necessary for the best interests of the village. In compliance with this provision, I have but little to say at present, but will endeavor from time to time hereafter to bring before you such matters as may need your attention. We all have duties to perform as village officers that will need earnest attention, and we cannot refuse to do our whole duty under the plea that "as we receive no pecuniary consideration for our services" we are not obliged to. We accepted the trust imposed upon us knowing this, and if we discharge our duties to the best of our ability, we have only borne our share of the public burden.

Before our terms of office expire we shall no doubt find the village under new conditions that will require our best thoughts and earnest work; and now, at the outset, I recommend that we see whether the ordinances that have heretofore been passed are what is best. I speak of this because in hurriedly reading them I find that the one on streets and sidewalks is defective in Section 13; and that the ordinance in regard to ice and snow on sidewalks on Bridge street cannot be enforced.

Complaints are made that the following ordinances are not enforced as they should be: the ordinance for the preservation of the peace; against the running at large of horses, swine, cattle, etc.; the so-called health ordinance.

Would it not be well, if such is the case, that the salaries of the Marshal and other officers whose duty it is to enforce them, be so increased that they can give the requisite time to their duties?

I would also recommend that the council find out definitely how much authority they have under the charter to regulate the movement of vessels in our harbor. In view of the commerce now using our harbor, and the increase that we may reasonably expect in the future, it would be policy to have our powers definitely settled.

I would recommend that the council establish a grade for what sidewalks are required to be laid by authority they have under the charter.

I would also recommend that if our village charter is not changed, "that a reasonable amount of the highway and contingent funds be expended upon the roads leading into the village within the limits of the Township, as may be recommended by the Street Committee and the Highway Commissioner jointly, and approved by the village council; said money to be expended under contract whenever it is possible.

Also that all work done for the village upon its streets and crossings be let to the lowest responsible bidder, whenever it is possible, and that all expenditures of the public money be made carefully, and only after rigid examination.

I hope that our associations the coming year, in our official relations, may be pleasant to us, and profitable to the village."

MASON & BERDAN.

THE FAST EXPRESS

Will Enter Charlevoix During October Next.

Albert E. Mason and John Burns returned from Grand Rapids and Chicago last week, having placed the Charlevoix bonds in escrow. A prominent railroad official told Mr. Mason that the people of Charlevoix need not be surprised to see a through C. & W. M. train at the foot of Pine Lake in October.

Henry H. and E. S. Noble, of Elk Rapids, were in town Saturday on railroad business. Both were confident that the road would be built by the shore route, but expressed the opinion that both lines would be covered. They have figured it out that the company intend to build the shore line for their fast passenger traffic, and take in the Intermediate route for the enormous freight traffic certain to be secured. And why not? They have already done this same thing at home. Mr. Noble intends to run trains from Traverse City to Grand Rapids in four hours the coming summer. By the shore run this would make Charlevoix five and one half hours from the Valley City. It would not be strange if the C. & W. M. did this very thing in order to clean out all competitors in the through passenger traffic to Northern Michigan. We give these observations for what they are worth. It is certain, however, that they are making a careful survey of the shore route. The engineers are but a short distance south of this village.

F. J. Meech is busy securing the right of way both north and south of this village. He is out all this week between here and Intermediate Lake.

Elk Rapids Progress: The deeds for the right of way from Traverse City to Elk Rapids will all be executed this week.

Bellaire Bugler: On Friday last Roswell Leavitt received a generous supply of right of way blanks, together with a letter from General Manager Heald, instructing him to at once secure the right of way from Williamsburg to the Ox-bow.

Grand Rapids Democrat: The Chicago & North Michigan company organized to build the extension of the Chicago & West Michigan from Traverse City to the straits of Mackinac, has filed with the commissioner of railroads, maps and profiles of its proposed route from Traverse City to Harbor Springs. The line runs west of the G. R. & I. to a point between Petoskey and Harbor Springs, where it crosses and runs into Harbor Springs north of the latter road. The line also runs directly, through the Bay View camp ground.

Geo. W. Miller.

Geo. W. Miller came to Charlevoix in July, 1869. Everybody throughout the Pine Lake region knows him, and we doubt if in the entire Union there is a more popular business man can be found. The Champion Harvester is pretty near doing him, in the loss of a season's stock; the Rock reaper nearly swamped him, but he has stuck hatched on his feet. He grows with the times.

His clothing store in the Buttars block, is probably the best stocked, best arranged and most attractive of any in Charlevoix county. This store he has completed a thorough renovation of his place, under the skillful hands of Chas. Graves, and with the new additions made to his stock adds a new attractiveness to a popular place of trade well worth a visit.

IMPROVEMENT.

The Charlevoix Association Again On Its Feet and Ready for Work.

Last Wednesday evening, pursuant to notice, the Charlevoix Improvement Association was reorganized by the election of the following officers: President, W. A. Smith; 1st Vice President, W. L. Hampton; 2d Vice President, Geo. Bates; Secretary, F. W. Mayne; Treasurer, A. T. Washburne; Executive Committee, Hon. A. Baston, S. M. See, F. J. Meech, A. E. Mason, J. R. Dixon, H. M. Enos, John Nicholls.

After an informal discussion of the objects of the Association, the meeting adjourned to Friday evening, March 27th. The attendance was not as large as it should have been. It is the duty of every citizen of Charlevoix, especially the business men, to make this a personal matter, and put into the work individual effort. If we would benefit Charlevoix we must crawl out of our shells.

Let every citizen attend the meeting at the Village Hall on Friday evening of this week.

Historical Society

The society met in the parlors of Mrs. F. J. Meech. All present were agreeably entertained with the following program: Vocal quartette, Misses Hattie Mason, Mamie See, May Brown, and Maggie Enos; recitation by Miss Phila Wood; historical paper, "Moses through the Conquest," Mrs. Barry; intermission; vocal solo, Miss Winnie Burbidge; select reading, Mrs. Enos; vocal solo, Miss Lillie Carpenter. Adjourned to meet at the call of the executive Committee.

A FIGHT WITH INDIANS.

A True Story of Kentucky Pioneer Life.

BY NEWTON H. HYNS.

[illegible] the year 1779 was remarkable in Kentucky for a great many atrocities committed by acquired territory. Hundreds of Indians were scalped, forting between it and the Ohio River, and the Indians were not wise to pass beyond the sound and a shaking more scared than all the others combined.

The Indians remained elsewhere seemed have passed their usual wakefulness, and many lucky pioneers, taking advantage of peaceful state of affairs, embarked with their families and household goods on flatboats and barges, and made their way to the various stations along the river.

Many of those parties, however, were quickly harassed by Indians along the banks of the river, and decoys, in the shape of white renegades, would suddenly appear upon the bank and implore the emigrants in the most beseeching tones of distress to land and take them on board, making the false statement that they were escaped prisoners from the Indians, and that unless aid was immediately given, they would be tomahawked.

The emigrants, being unsuspecting and willing to listen to these heartrending appeals and desirous to land like head to take on these seemingly unfortunate creatures, thought nothing of the strange conduct, for they were almost out of food and needed a change and total starvation. A merry war ensued, and the Indians were [illegible] a [illegible] of scattered savages would land on board and massacre the whole crew.

In the spring of the above-mentioned year two flatboats, with a barge in tow, engaged in the business of floating down the ohio River, destined for some of the navy station, and were built along that stream.

The crews of the boats consisted of two families of Virginia emigrants, who were bound for Nashville, Tenn., and had left their homes in the Old Dominion with the intention of settling in the Cumberland Valley, which they had heard was a very fertile country, and very inviting to the emigrants.

The parties of the boats began hastily to order as to what had best be done. The two emigrants conversed a few moments together, and then advanced to where the crews of the boats were standing. Mr. Wright solemnly inquired:

"What think you, Sam? Had we best pull ashore and take him in?"

"It would be an inside mighty big," answered the hailed man. "He is only a decoy! If you run the boats ashore you will encounter, when too late, that you have run into a decoy." says Harry's Indians in those Indian cabins." and as he spoke he pointed to the bank where the unpromising man was standing.

"But I do not know," exclaimed Mr. Wright in incredible tones.

"It is not only possible, but altogether probable," answered Sam. "Be not interrupt him," he continued, and, pointing to the edge of the bank, he called out:

"Are the men you to fall into the hands of the Indians, and how did you escape?"

"I was out hunting, my answered the man, "and before I was aware of it, I found myself surrounded by a band of Indians, who made me their prisoner. They were armed principally with bows and arrows and tomahawks; a few had guns of the old flintlock make. Hand in those days, in the use of which, however, they were not very proficient, and as a consequence, were unable to do much execution with them.

Wildly gesticulating they plunged into the shallow water, and discharging a shower of arrows at the crew of emigrants, they began wading toward the stranded boats.

Young Worth, with that presence of mind born of the frontier, now hurried the women and children into the little cabin of the boat, and, commanding the crew man to stand firm, calmly continued the scattering bands of savages. In authoritative tones he ordered each man to select an Indian, make aim, of his aim and fire.

It was a pretty effective charge, for more than a dozen of the dusky assailants dropped lifeless into the water, leaving several others, badly wounded, to wade back to the shore. For a moment they wavered, but the next instant with renewed yells, they advanced again, and over the emigrants could hear their pieces the red-skins were swarming the deck of the first boat.

The emigrants now retreated to the opposite side of the boat while rendering their rifles.

Young Worth, with lightning rapidity, had reloaded, and as the first Indian leaped on board he sprayed the contents of his rifle into the head of the brawny savage, who instantly dropped to the deck, dead. Then, clubbing his rifle, the young man swung it aloft and brought it down with crushing effect upon the skull of another Indian who was just endeavoring to swing himself into the boat. By this time the Indians had begun to notice the effective blows of the young backwoodsman, and accordingly gave him a wide berth. In the meantime, were swarming the boat on either side of him.

And now followed a scene of terrible confusion. The emigrants and a few of the negroes had recoiled their rifles by this time, and they again fired with good effect, but the greater part of the slaves, entirely unused to such terrible scenes, were so frightened that they dropped their firearms, and were running wildly about the boat in frenzied distress, vainly trying to evade the cruel blows of the savages.

Suddenly the sharp report of four rifles rent the air, and as many Indians sank in death upon the deck of the boat.

Glancing quickly in the direction whence came the shots, the astonished emigrants saw a [illegible] approaching them at rapid speed, with loud shouts. Simon Kenton and his four comrades leaped into the deck of the flatboat, and instantly drawing their tomahawks, they succeeded in a hand-to-hand contest with the Indians.

With a shout of encouragement to their assistance, Sam Worth, leaping his tomahawk aloft, plunged into the thickest of the fight with redoubled energy.

At the moment that Kenton and his followers appeared upon the deck the remaining savages began to retreat. Many of the Indians recognized Kenton and his companions, and they had a lively deed of meeting such braves men.

The crews of the rangers soon began to count and identify prisoners, and they commenced leaping the emigrants into the water, endeavoring to [illegible] the places in that all the streets and avenues will be swept and sprinkled and cleaned electrical inventors. A number of clay are [illegible] and the "electric city" will be in a fair way to be a little more than a mere name.

Electricity for Heating Purposes Use.

Electrical people familiar with all the [illegible] of the light and power business impatient sometimes at the slow [illegible] attends the general introduction of electricity for heating. An expression of this feeling has lately been seen in a movement to establish an "electric city" at South Lakewood, [illegible] New York, [illegible] Philadelphia, and not a few innovations of a similar character, promising an increase in comfort and convenience. It is [illegible] that the streets and avenues will be swept and sprinkled and cleaned electrical inventors. A number of clay are [illegible] and the "electric city" will be in a fair way to be a little more than a mere name.

After kindly assisting the emigrants to begin the journey of the river once more, the crewts embarked in their boats and with many parting thanks from their new made friends, they chirrup [illegible] the Southern shore. Arriving hastily pulling it into the dense undergrowth that lined the bank, they disappeared from view.

The emigrants now continued their journey down the river, and nothing further occasioned their arrived safely at their point of destination.

They settled upon the fertile and of the Indians, and, in the course of years, their island Sam Worth had purchased, built a fine mansion, and became prosperous and affluent planters.

Thus ended the last battle of this terrible experience with Indians on the banks of the Ohio River, Simon Worth and Ada Wright were united in marriage, and, in the course of years, their [illegible] grew up around them, they too, soon became prosperous and happy.

ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE

INCIDENTS AND INTERESTING ANECDOTES OF THE WAR.

The Veterans of the Rebellion Tell of Whistling Bullets, Bright Bayonets, Bursting Shells, Bloody Battles, Camp Life, and Festive Hogs.

General W. T. Sherman.

O, grandest of the grand! war or not, brave, loyal son, by freedom blest. Orbs fleeth alone confounder thine, Yet thy brave foes from sea to sea Will ever honor thee, and thy name Will ever be a household word to them. The laws who saw or heard of thee.

So bright blade will wake it. Soul, Nor rust, nor rust of martial trial. No martial blade, no martial soul. Thy name, thy name, resounding here, Where thousands sleep, and thousands are free, From old Atlanta to the sea, With his brave force, clear ariel and true, Will still pass by to grand review.

Beat on your march unto the grave, Marching and sidewalk upon the brave. For that brave soul who knew no fear Lies calmly sleeping on his bier. Come on the force, who to war Shall ever be a bright and shining star, And through dark wrecks of battle smoke, Shall ever be a guiding star. Mid storm of shot and valor's blow, Mid storm of shot and valor's blow.

Where are the heroes who to war, Begin the journey of the river once more. Thousands of our boys, three of which Each with their brave, brave, brave each soldier, Hancock, Sir Jellar, and others of fame, Are now in the Southern states.

Now still at rest [illegible] a nation's sighs.

Cremation—Solid—Its reform gain. Its ashes—Time is more so more; Ashes—Time is more so more; As the density substitute "Grand bless long" Ashes—Time is more so more. Ashes—Time is more so more. Ashes—Time is more so more.

Grant, then, he was a soldier, and, since the war of rebellion, Grant Worth had purchased, built a fine mansion, and became prosperous and affluent planters.

Thus ended the last battle of this terrible experience with Indians on the banks of the Ohio River, Simon Worth and Ada Wright were united in marriage, and, in the course of years, their [illegible] grew up around them, they too, soon became prosperous and happy.

During the four years of Cleveland's administration the Democrats were sorely worried overt he immense surplus in the U. S. Treasury. A surplus was something that Democratic administrations were not used to, and they did not know what to do with it. They tried to make a plea for a reduction of the tariff towards free trade. The country owed an immense debt and was paying millions of dollars every year in interest while the immense sum was laying idle in the treasury and not earning one cent. The present Republican administration adopted business principles, such as any honest business man would adopt in conducting his private business, and applied the surplus to paying off the debt and stopping the flow of interest as far as possible. During the first two years of Cleveland's administration the public debt was reduced $141,536,300. During the first two years of Harrison's administration the debt was reduced $265,000,000 making a saving to the people of about $6,500,000. This is the contrast between a Democratic record and a Republican record.

It is amusing to witness the struggles of the free trade organs with the McKinley bill. The growth of this measure in popularity is almost as great a surprise to its friends as it must have been to its enemies. Campaign prizes turned out to be campaign lies, and the people are beginning to realize phases of this bill, which were almost entirely overlooked in the campaign of last fall. First came treaty with Brazil, illustrating the automatic reciprocity feature of the McKinley bill. Within a few days the duty will be abolished on sugar, and it is said the price will take a sudden dr p. Then there is that clause providing for free importation of raw material to be manufactured into articles for exporting the American manufacturer equal footing with his trans-atlantic competitors for all foreign trade. How we have reciprocity, free sugar and free raw material. The meaning of this is an enormous reduction in the burden of taxation, advantageous terms for the admission of American goods into foreign markets, and free raw material out of which to manufacture those exports. Besides absolutely protecting the home market, the McKinley bill has thus redeemed unnecessary taxation and opened up important South American markets to the products of our soil, mines, workshops and mills.— New York Press.

In the matter of the Antrim tax sales the Judge has entered an order continuing the hearing of the petition of the Auditor General until the May term of court.

Traverse City has a new industry for manufacturing a patent potato planter. Orders for planters have been received as far away as Van Couver's Island, British Columbia.

John Black, of East Bay township, Grand Traverse county, carried over 1,700 bushels of potatoes, and has been delivering them here during the last week at the rate of 300 bushels per day, and receiving 90 cents cash per bushel.

Over 24,000 speckled trout, small fry, were placed in Elk river last Tuesday. Now if the state would pay a premium for the destruction of the Mongrel, lake trout and mus ralouge, we might receive some benefit from the plant.—Elk Rapids Inland.

The Evening News says: "J. Ward Davis, of Elk Rapids, and Prof. Hensley, of anywhere, we read candidates for deputy oil inspector for Grand Traverse district. Hensley bases his claim to greatness on a big toobole relationship to the Governor. Davis is the candidate of the Traverse and Antrim county democracy. It is said Hensley has the call for the place."

The Messiah will appear in the form of a woman who will destroy every household that do not have a pestle and mortar in "very doorway.

Grand Traverse Herald: Announcement has been made that as soon as the engraving can be done (probably by May 1st) a sectional map, compiled from the coast survey and government surveys, of the region from Manistee, Cadillac and Lake City, north to include St. Ignace, Cheboygan and the Islands, will be put forth by Geo. E. Steele, of Traverse City. The railroads, resorts, lakes, streams and principal towns will be shown, and the sections—the latter very convenient for real estate purposes. The margin will be so arranged as to take any advertising.

The Northport correspondent of the Waconsin furnishes the following interesting information concerning the ice in that vicinity: "The ice has all gone out of Grand Traverse Bay. The bay was closed just seventeen days all told. There is no ice to be seen in the Manitou passage, between Leland and the islands, nor has there been any this winter. The mail has been carried to the islands all winter in open boats, and Andrew Petrachar who carried the mail from Leland to the north island, has missed but seven trips this winter, which is a pretty good record when it is taken into consideration that he carries a semi-weekly mail." Of the intrepid mail carrier referred to above, a Michigan exchange recently made this mention: "The North Manitou Island lies fourteen miles west of the mainland, and and gets its mail from Leland twice a week. Andrew Petrachar has been making semi-weekly trips between his insular home and Leland for two years. During the summer time he crosses alone, but in the fall and winter he hires a companion. Andrew was born in Denmark thirty-four years ago, and as soon as he was able to tumble into a boat he began the life of a fisherman. Crossing the Manitou passage and landing on too inhospitable shore in Novembr and winter is no child's play, and many a time this winter people have stood on the shore and held their breaths as they watched the courageous mail carrier toss about on the foam-capped seas in his little dory. His boat is the typical Norwegian fish boat, sharp at both ends, sloop-rigged, carries two jibs and a dish bottom. It is 24 feet keel and 8 feet beam, and has not missed a trip this winter when the ice in the lake would permit a crossing. He has crossed the lake at times when it seemed impossible that his little boat could live, but neither wind and waves, sleet or snow seemed to daunt him, and the gallant little craft lifts her prow to mount each succeeding wave, regardless of the fact that every drop of spray that boutches her, at once becomes ice. For the service Mr. Peschkar gets $1 per trip, and if he misses a trip without some good cause he forfeits $5 to the government."

To The Patrons of The Public Schools.

This is vacation week, School opens next Monday, for the spring term. Parents and patrons, may the Superintendent have a word with you? You expect much of the schools. It is just that you should; and it is because we believe you are willing to do your part toward realizing that expectation, that this is written. Cannot there be an improvement in some quarters, in the regularity of attendance? It is to the credit of the community that there is generally a great effort made by parents and pupils to keep up the record, and on the whole that record is one of which we may be justly proud. But it might be better, and it is to those who can make it better that this appeal is chiefly made.

Teachers can do nothing for children if they are not in school. They can do little if they are not there regularly. Few parents or pupils realize the effect of even a few days absence in a term or a year. It may be but a half day in a week, but it often occurs just when the most important lessons are to be learned, or when class exercises are to be given, that will climb the work already done. The loss of time puts the pupil at a disadvantage in two ways, certainly; he loses, temporarily, the lessons learned by the class during his absence, which are the foundation for the subsequent work, and, as a consequence of this, he loses interest in the work, which interest is essential to the good progress in the future.

Parents sometimes say a child does go very regularly because he loses not much interest in his school work. Almost universally the real truth is the child has no interest because he does not go regularly. A few children will study at home to make up lessons lost from school. But how many yet as much time, and as diligent study upon such work, as they spend after school? Few indeed, and of those, a far smaller portion can make up by such diligence, for the drill and instruction given by the teacher and those who are present. It is a mistake to suppose that a pupil can get much of the time and lessons lost from school. But where one benefits the full benefit of the school, the proportion is more likely to be reserved.

To those who make so much effort to be punctual and regular, all teachers are most grateful; and to the rest let me say, give us the children, the first day and every day, and all will be done that can be done by teachers.

THE MULE OF SUMPTER.

An Interesting Incident of the War That Almost Ended and Fire.

The newspapers and magazines are full of war stories but there are few of them any better than this one told by an old soldier at a New York dinner table the other evening:

When Dahlgren's ironclad began operations in Charleston harbor, the Youth Army Corps made a sodden dash and drove in the thin lines of pickets which the Southern officers had posted on the eastern end of Morris Island. When daylight came, every one which Beauregard could bring to bear upon the new work began to rain shot and shell.

There were enough man there, but there was a deficiency of ammunition.

The only road was the smooth sand beach along the bay, and the distance between the two points about a mile and a half. Half the distance within easy range of Fort Sumter, and Battery Wagner's guns covered all the way to the sand hills behind which was the Federal camp.

I am describing the incident as it appeared from the skipping in the bay, and what called attention to it was the sudden ducking up of every gun on the southeast angle of Sumter.

Looking to see the cause of the furious cannonading, everybody was surprised to see a mule team tearing up the beach in the direction of the work. The driver was laying the lash on, and that mule had its ears laid straight back, and was making its legs fly.

Occasionally a shell would touch the beach, bound up and explode, and the mule would then hesitate and try to turn back. But the driver would lay the cow-hide on with renewed vigor, then the mule put on another spurt, until it had become entirely demoralized by the expression of a temper such about inside the body.

The driver got off his seat, took the animal by the bridle, winded it round once or twice, and started it up the beach once more.

Every Sumter flashed and damed, Battery Wagner let loose its thunder of, and still that daring driver urged his mule along, through the way it was swept by at least thirty guns.

At last he reached his destination, but he could not stay there, and in a moment he was turned around and exerting that animal to do his level best. The mule did not need to be told to step out, for in its rear there were four and twenty shell and about its ears were flying such hard scrapiron, which seemed to increase its fleetness.

Down the hard beach flew the mule, the light over building and swaying, and the drivers arms rising and falling as he urged the animal on the lash. At last they neared the friendly shelter of the sand-hills.

In another minute they will be safe, but just as they neared the place the mule stumbled, a shell came screaming from Sumter, the driver leaped and the huge mass of iron as it ripped through the air, fell, struck the beach directly in the rear of the mule, and bound a hundred yards in a mass, plowed with terrific violence.

When the shell exploded a circle of smoke hid the spot from view, and when the smoke cleared away Mr. Mule was lying on his back, with his head down and legs lashing wildly in the air, and the driver picking up the cart, which had been badly demolished, and a fragment of the shell.

Presently the driver is seen limping to the mule, in a moment he has made a free from the cart, and, with the driver on one hook and a farewell kick of his tail, disappears behind the cover of the hills.

The thousands of boys in blue unite in a long and lusty hurrah; the sailors vent their tars and cheer themselves hoarse, and, hark! the Southern soldiers send through the inference and are cheering, too!

There are about 22,000 arrests each year in Paris, of which three-fourths are necessaries.

A Contemporary's Account of the Famous Highwaymen.

M. de Blowitz, the contemporary of Tallyrand's and superintendent of spies at the Congress of Berlin, and a reputed ex Paris, relates the following anecdote of the famous highwaymen, who has, himself, played no inconspicuous part:

"M. de Tallyrand," says M. de Blowitz, "on leaving the Prussian Embassy, called his valet to follow him in Jena, and knowing that on them occasions one was to be met, advised me to find Marshal Hinrichs, whenever he might be, and use the strongest language in my vocabulary on the part of the Prussian government in order to induce the marshal to give some promising orders which would prevent the threatened outrage.

"Well I was not, I found the king will never himself carried to the bridge and I was obliged to go alone.

"Not previously people will not leave a so-called money, but say something stronger—very strong."

"Yes! I went to discover the marshal, who was ready to be found, in a very pleasant manner, in the Italian Royal. Thought by no means delighted at being disturbed in his only amusement, the marshal, on being assured that the name of the bridge was to be taken, gave the necessary orders for stopping the destruction.

"Well I was satisfied, and gave an account of my mission. M. de Tallyrand said, good-humoredly:

"Well, now I think that we may go to Jena in safety. Do you believe? You remember the king threatened to be carried to the bridge, and was prepared to blow up with it. It will be a pity if we should be robbed."

I profited by the hint. The anecdote appeared in all the papers, and the king received the compliments made to him upon his accomplished "fallibility and assurance."

A man at Toccoa, Ga., has been totally blind from infancy and has not been educated, yet possesses unusual mechanical ingenuity and solves mathematical problems. He can tell time by touch, can tell the hour and when traveling can tell when he is passing other towns distance from the road, such as a house or tree.

A Valuable Volume.

"There is now in San Francisco a volume from which men are far more valuable by the world. It is worth exactly $10 000 and is regarded by whosoever knows and liberality of 3,000 Chinese residents in the Pacific states. It is the Chinese Bible, printed in Canton in 1, 127, at Tien-Ching in the province of that city. Copies of it are very rare, and it is the only one in the world. The Chinese are all in the hands of one of the most and also subject to the rules of our deceased thereby the following decree: Whoever shall take this Bible out of the city of Canton shall be put to death." Thus it is that the Chinese Bible in Tuesday Fleet-Time, the Chinese Bible in Wah Wah, and containing 2,000 years of Chinese wisdom, is now in Chinese Bible, Chinese, Canton, Wah Wah.

The Rodeo.

Down, down the dark canons we ride in a flare
The colors away by in their myriad hues
Blow into the wind are the hangings and wraps
Blow into the West with the plumes
Hot! there is the heat of the hills and the valleys
It is the fuel feeds to the midsummer eclipse
High upon the steeps where the gray shapes
Stand
It is he that feeds to the long lagoon,
Where the still minded splashes the slope
With yellow and red
Hot is the heat at bay—O the powerful fellow See the hues of his head—hear the hounds and the horses
How he leaves the ground with his heavy hoofs!
Now he breaks a wild path thro' the deep,
Now he is lost in the shadows
A bald old bluff on a lonesome hushed
Hangs like a gray of crimson he catches—
On into the plume under leafy roofs,
O, the joy of the wind in our faces! We fell
The cattle—we almost down the poppy-lining lea
Into the plume under leafy roofs,
And startled the colons on rocky cliffs
Ho! What was it passed—were they pigeons
Or were they
Then wheeled away like a turtle or arrows!
The tone color thickens; the deep strike
Rolling
Speed, speed, move the hounds in their pelts Speed, speed with the thunder and surge of the horses
The hurry, the shouting, the wild joy of battle
The hills and the wind and the open (sight)
Now on into the camp by the sycamores you
Now—the guitar tri the light fingers sweep
All thoughts to the heart give response and tender
Thus spake—said the dreams of a summer night

MARTHA'S MISSION.

Like a lily, tall and slender and graceful, Martha Fairfield looked in the sunshine, her golden hair, her complexion and liquid gray eyes, as she stood in the window, waiting for the rumble of the omnibus wheels on the turn of the avenue, while close at her side a heavy-eyed widow resolutely endeavored to keep back the tears.

"It will not be for long, mamma, dear," said Martha, encouragingly.

And Mrs. Fairfield answered heavily: "No, darling, it will not be for long."

"And only to think mamma, it was our Martha, cheerily, "I am to have $100 a year and a six weeks' vacation in the summer, and all the duties I am to perform are being companion to an invalid. You don't know how rich I feel, mamma, dear. And I shall send you a check for the very first quarterly payment I receive; for what do I need in money, mamma, with my shoes, new outfit or dresses?"

Mrs. Fairfield sighed softly. A situation for Martha had been the most earnest desire of mother and daughter for the past six months—ever since Colonel Fairfield's death had left them comparatively penniless; but now that it had actually come, by means of a newspaper advertisement that Martha had valiantly answered, she felt a vague sense of coming danger and misfortune, which was inexplicable even to herself.

A long, loving embrace—a tearful parting—and the omnibus so long dreaded by both was over; and the future had begun for Martha.

Three days of the volume was simply enough—a long, wearisome journey by rail, by stage and, with tiles afterward, long the very heart of the Catskill mountains. And as the purples tinges of twilight were beginning to settle down in the gorges, the coach stopped.

"Can you lead to Campington Hall?" called out the driver, leisurely. "Now, miss, miss, look alive! there's a village waiting."

"Miss Fairfield," said the chairmen of this latter employer, respectfully approaching the lady. "Yes, Mr. Campington sent me down here to meet you."

"Dr. Campington?" Martha repeated, with a little sinking of heart, and a sure mind that Dr. Campington must be the medical attendant of her invalid companion. "Is it he?"

"No, miss—a matter of two miles or more."

"Two miles." Martha leaned wearily back in the carriage, and the town here well to conceal the drops that gathered in her eyes.

It was a sad and desolate ride quite off the sublime scenery that Martha, so solid, like a panorama, on either side of her; and Martha felt, poor girl, and her rejoice when the man said: "There's the Hall, miss."

It was a spacious and rather gloomy-looking mansion, set well back from the height, with a terraced walk extending along its whole front.

"What a large house!" she exclaimed.

"Yes, miss. It is large," said the coachman, "and it's very gloomy, sold, like a panorama, on either side of it; and Mister Jack will be right, I reckon, when the man said: "There's the Hall, miss."

"Miss Ophelia," cried she, "how ever came you here? Come we up directly, miss, or I'll call the doctor."

The girl shrugged her shoulders impatiently.

"I am not afraid of the doctor," said she. "He is always kind to me. Besides, he knows that his position in court physician depends entirely upon my good word with the King."

"Come away, miss, dear," coaxed the woman. "You must get to bed early, you know, or you won't be fresh when he comes, so may he bell do to morrow morning."

"That is true," said the girl, her dark sleepy eyes lighting up. "Yes, Hester, you I will come."

And kissing her hand to Martha, with a gay gesture of farewell, she skipped away after the woman.

Martha followed her to the door; and there, pacing up and down the wide passage, by the light of a single pendent lamp, was a strange-looking woman, with a large wash-doll in her arms, over which she bent her head, making an inarticulate cooing sound as she walked.

"Who is that?" she asked of the woman who was leading the passive "Ophelia" away.

"It's Mrs. Jessup. Poor thing!" she added in an undertone, "she thinks everything by fall so dreadfully, since her baby died and was buried thirteen years ago. There comes the doctor now."

As Dr. Campington entered Martha felt a sudden shiver pass over her frame.

"Sir" said she timidly, "what place is this you have brought me to? A madhouse?"

He sat quietly down, beckoning her to an opposite chair, with an air of quiet authority that she found it impossible to resist.

"You are quite right," said he. "It is what the world calls a madhouse, but we, who are wiser in the history of mental and nervous diseases, call it a Sanitary Retreat."

"But you have deceived me. You advertised for a companion to an invalid."

"Have we not many invalids here?" Dr. Campington asked, with a smile. "Poor Ophelia is your own and good sense how many answers we should get if we advertised wanted for—Wanted—A keeper in a madhouse. Sir, Mr. Fairfield, I am proud and refused in your eyes. But take time to consider. Your duties will be light, merely the supervision and companionship of the two or three of our most delicate invalids who can not be intrusted to the care and unremitting attention of medals—your salary double what was mentioned in the advertisement. I will wait your decision to-morrow morning in this apartment. Hester," to the little maid who had brought the tea, "show Miss Fairfield to her room."

And in a large and airy apartment, with casements which overlooked the mountain slopes, Martha Fairfield sat down to decide.

There was something in Dr. Campington's calm eye and sallow wrinkled face that resembled her—the "Mathouse" seeming no longer to possess terror in her sight.

"I have two outgrown the superstitious age of the world," she told herself, "and I, in particular, very, very, prided myself on my strength of mind. I have a mission—$100 a year. Yes, that sum I could give dear mamma even luxuries. Yes I will stay!"

"Well, which is it to be—yes or no?" Dr. Campington said on the morrow when Martha sent him, with clear, violet eyes and looks of relief resolve, "Yes."

"I thought so. In fact, I knew it," he said, laughing. "For I am rather a physiognomist in my way and I read your face yesterday."

Martha stayed at Campington Hall; but she never wrote to her mother that she was—contrary to her—at the end of the quarter Dr. Campington paid her $75.

"Well," said he, "have you found it very hard work?"

Martha smilingly shook her head.

"On the contrary," said she, "I like it. Ophelia is one of the sweetest, gifts and best companions I ever knew when she can forget her sorrow, delusions and——"

"Yes?" said Dr. Campington, "and they all like you. So do I."

Martha smiled and colored. Dr. Campington watched her face intently.

"Miss Fairfield," said he, "you have never asked me what nearly every one else does—why I do not marry?"

"Because," said Martha, "I can imagine the reason. Your standard is high—you never yet have met the woman to realize it."

"You are wrong, then, sharlin," said he. "I have met her. She stood before me now. Martha I may be well confess the truth—I have allowed myself to fall in love with you, hard headed, hard-hearted man of medicine though I am. Will you become my wife?" And Martha Fairfield answered, Yes, I will."

Unanimous graceful and gentle, the gendles over Campington Hall the sweetest and happiest of all among women, proud in her husband's matchless power of doing good, proud in her mother's happiness, still prouder of her own mission in soothing the jarred nerves of those in whose minds reason sits unsteadily. "I must be doing my mission," Martha says. "I have found it now."

Mme. Nilsson's Fondness for Poker.

"Do you know what's the matter with Nilsson, the famous opera singer?" remarked Capt. A. H. Matox. "She's a poker fiend, and has injured her voice through her passion for the green cloth. I don't know whether she still sings up of nights playing poker, but she used to. I remember some years ago when I was writing musical criticisms for the Square I used my card up to the business office. She sent for me and requested an interview. She sent word for me to come on. I found her playing poker with Marcus Mayer and Henry Abbey. She was executing a tirade from a deceased—medium, you know was religious. Well, the clergyman came, but before he was admitted the player chips and cards were hurriedly swept up, Mme. had just won a jack-pot and was intensely interested in the game, but when the clergyman entered her demeanor and apparently fully realizing that this is a very wicked game, and that it was the duty of every true Christian to encourage him in it, in every, very good. I never saw such excellent acting. The clergyman remained but a few minutes, he had business to do, and Mme. Nilsson when out came the chips and pay was resumed. Madam laughed heartily at her little joke."

The Deserted East.

The other evening I came upon a party of gentlemen just returned from their summer outings and exchanging notes thereupon, says a writer in the N. Y. Sun.

"I traveled about through eastern Massachusetts a good deal last summer," said one of them "and of all the forlornest places I ever saw in any parts of the old Bay State seemed the most desolate. In certain parts of Plymouth County there are acres of abandoned cleared fields, once in farming purposes which are now given up to forlorn, scrubby growths with a thick carpet of brown pine needles underfoot, interspersed with undulations of the carpet one can discern where stood cellars of old farms. Occasionally the ruins of an old house are met with, the roof long fallen and a bit of old chimney standing, revetted like above them, and sometimes with a few rods of earth and dark, semi-covered water inside deep down, with peak, scrub spruce out of it."

Gen. Hawks's Story About his Charger.

"Gen. Hawks's story about his war charger," said Boston Attorney Boutwell, "reminds to mind one Hooker rode in 1863 and especially at the battle of Chancellorsville. Few people know Hooker came by that horse, and I will tell you. When Sickles's corps was posted on Cooper Hill, just across the eastern branch, and about a quarter of a mile above the Chancellor of Fred Dangfiel, I happened one day, while out foraging for something to eat, to come across a mulleyfoot Arabian stallion that had been hidden in the woods by his master. I took the horse into camp and here Sickles, who was a crony of Hooker's, saw him no sooner put his eyes on him than recognized his from one. I made no remonstrance, however, as the horse was of no use to me.

"A few days later the owner of the Arabian came into our camp, identified his horse and claimed him. Sickles told him he was a confounded fool, and refused to give him up. Then the owner went to Secretary Stanton for relief, and made affidavit that he was forced to come back to camp with the order from Stanton to Sickles to deliver the horse. In the meantime the horse had disappeared. He turned up, however, in New York city a few days later as the property of George Wilkes, but soon Stanton saw the horse's owner was aware of these facts. When the matter was explained down, one day an item appeared in the papers that George Wilkes had presented a magnificent Arabian war charger to Gen. Hooker. Thus we have the horse came into Hooker's possession, and how he came to ride him at the battle of Chancellorsville. He was one of the finest specimens of his race, and when mounted on him Gen. Hooker was not only the most prominent officer in the Union army, but he was and looked the most imposing. Remarked.

From the remotest times men counted the sun, moon and stars by kissing the hand.

Gossip About Railroad Matters—The Shore Survey.

Mr. Meech is still at work securing right-of-way.

Engineer McKay and his corps, reached here Thursday, having completed the survey of the so-called shore route. Friday Mr. McKay received instructions by wire to take soundings of the upper channel on the line of the road, as a basis of work on the railroad bridge.

Bellaire Breeze: Hon. Roswell Leavitt has been instructed by General Manager Heald to secure the right-of-way for the C. & W. M. road via Bellaire, and he has already secured contracts for forty miles, from Williamsburg to Kingworth. This looks as though Bellaire was "in it."——Since our last issue Roswell Leavitt has received from General Manager Heald plats showing the line exact that will be followed by the C. & W. M. railroad between Williamsburg and Ellsworth, and he is now using the same as a guide in securing right of way. —— Considerable has been done during the week toward securing railroad right of way through Bellaire. Several residences are on the line, and a portion of the lots are held by non-residents, causing the matter to move slowly. It will be secured, however, even if some pieces have to be condemned.

Grand Rapids Democrat: Western Michigan to the front! A new railroad from Manistee to Grand Rapids; an extension from Traverse City to Charlevoix and Petoskey. An extension from Traverse City to Elk Rapids; one from Alba to East Jordan.——The proposed line of the Chicago & North Michigan, after leaving Petoskey, passes between the Grand Rapids & Indiana road and the shore. When the Bay View people hear of this there will be a tremendous kick, as the railroad plans to pass through the district occupied by the cottages and monopolize largely the lake front. The map of the new route from Traverse City City to Mackinaw has been filed with the railroad commissioner.

The directors of the Chicago & West Michigan Railroad Company, through their treasurer, Chas. Merriam, of Boston, have issued the the following circular to the stockholders, relative to the extension of the road from Traberse City north:

"The extension to Traverse City last year has been profitable to the company, and to add still more to its income producing power it is desirable to control a line extending further north from our terminus at Traverse City to Bay View, two miles beyond Petoskey, in all a line of about ninety-three miles. To this end, parties acting in our interest have organized a corporation under the laws of Michigan called the Chicago & North Michigan Railroad Company, and have taken the preliminary steps toward locating and constructing the new line. This proposed new road will run through an admirable timber country, and a thorough examination of the section has fully confirmed the directors in their belief that it will prove both a wise and profitable undertaking, at that it should be constructed at once. Charlevoix and Petoskey, two of the objective points, are already quite noted summer resorts, and travel to and from those points is rapidly increasing. In view of the great advantage to our road from controlling the business of this new line, your directors have agreed to find the means of constructing and equipping it, and to permanently operate it as a part of our line, and upon terms which will result in the Chicago & West Michigan Railway Company becoming the owner of substantially the whole stock and of the entire bond issue of the new road. Trustees are about to be thus authorized by your directors now offer to the stockholders of the Chicago & West Michigan Railway company. The bonds will be delivered with the guaranty of the Chicago & West Michigan Railway company of principal and interest and the stock will be entitled to the same dividends that may after its issue, be paid upon the stock of the Chicago & West Michigan Railway Company. The issue of first mortgage bonds will be limited to $10,000 per mile. This company reserves the right to issue its own shares to stockholders at the rate of ... per share for each ... of the new road."

THE FIRST FRUITS

Connable & Sons of Petoskey to Remove Their Entire Plant to Charlevoix.

Already we begin to feel the effects of the projected railroad extension.

On Friday last Messrs. Arthur and Ralph Connable, of Petoskey, who are the managers of one of the most extensive fishing plants on the great lakes, purchased of the Dixons, of this place, 2½ acres of land on Pine Lake, at a point just north of the Chicago Resort, to which they will, at the close of this season's work, remove their entire Petoskey plant.

The site has three hundred feet frontage on Pine Lake, and is about evenly divided, north and south, by the C. & W. M. grade.

The Connables, in an interview with our scribe, stated that they were making the change for the following reasons: (1) The superior harbor secured here. (2) The longer season of navigation from this port. (3) More convenient railroad facilities. (4) The fact that Charlevoix is fifteen miles nearer their fishing grounds than Petoskey.

Their operations here will begin with the harvesting of their next winter's ice-crop, which they will follow by the construction of docks, and the erection of their freezers, warehouse and boarding-house. The spring of 1892 will see the whole plant in operation here.

The firm operate three tugs during the entire season of navigation, adding three during fall fishing. During the latter period they employ about sixty-five men; the average of men employed for the year of twelve months being about thirty.

In addition to their large catch they buy largely from smaller concerns, and their shipments of fresh fish are enormous. They have a house in Chicago, which is managed by Arthur, while Ralph will have charge of the Charlevoix end.

The acquisition of this solid concern is a big red feather in the cap of Charlevoix.

A pleasant time at Alfred Hiss' party, Saturday evening.

Very interesting meetings Sunday afternoon, at the Young People's Christian Union Endeavor.

—At the Republican caucus Monday evening, the folling excellent Township ticket was nominated. Supervisor, Bennet L. See; Clerk, H. S. Hardy; Treasurer, Frank E. Wood; High way Commissioner, Henry Cunningham; Justice, H. G. Edwards; Board of Review (2 years), Henry C. Cooper (1 year), O. S. Washburn; Drain Commissioner, Henry Moore; Constables, Joseph Stevens, L. E. Smith, Frank Bennett, Geo. Ford, Geo. Ferris.

WHAT ABOUT IT?

Will the Business Men of Charlevoix Pull Themselves Together.

From various causes, the meeting of the Improvement Association was not well attended last Friday evening. After a short session, the Association adjourned to

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 10

If we would avail ourselves of the opportunities offered, business men and citizens generally must unite in the work contemplated in the organization of the Association.

Already there is work to be done that will benefit Charlevoix at once. Let us be up and doing. Let it not be said that Charlevoix lacks enterprise.

Make a memorandum of the date.

Norwood Notes.

Less than nine miles by the survey from the depot at Norwood to the station at Charlevoix.

The Easter exercises at the church Sunday evening were very nice and well executed.

E. S. Noble was very much surprised to find out that Norwood was two miles east of Elk Rapids.

William Harris thinks it he could be sent down to Boston he could show the shore route to the directors of the C. & W. M. so they would not hesitate an instant before beginning work on the shore route.

The W. C. T. U. meet with Mrs. L. Lewis Friday afternoon. Prayer meeting at Thos. Muirhead's Thursday evening.

Clara Nash has a brother, she says, "she cums and his name is Neddie." He weighs 9 pounds and is staying at present with his father G. V. Nash of this city.

The new meat market will be in running order in about two weeks.

Nice maple sugar is coming into the market now.

The Silver family showed to a good house last Saturday night.

Norman Smith is home from Charlevoix, where he has been attending school the past winter.

Daniel Stafford is framing Jack McIntyre's 45x50 ft. barn, which he will erect on "twenty-four" this spring.

The mill will start up in about two weeks. Will have a nice stock ready to ship by rail June 1st.

Election will soon be here; vote early and often and be sure and vote for the wrong man for pathmaster; roads are not much accorded to a country anyway. Its a railroad we want.

The Lawrence leaves Chicago Saturday, Apr. 4th, for all points north as far as St. James. The water is so low this spring, we expect to do lots of transferring of freight and passengers for all ports north of here.

If any special money is voted for highway purposes this spring be sure and have it all put in the hands of the highway commissioner with orders to have it all worked in one place, and not scattered all over the district as has been done heretofore. By doing this we can, in two or three years show a big improvement in our roads.

Happy Hoosiers.

Mr. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, stock man and farmer, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies." He found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c a bottle at E. E. Thompson's drug store.

GOOD SERVICE.

The Charlevoix Fire Department Has the Laugh on the Growlers.

At nine o'clock Monday morning an alarm of fire was rung in six minutes from the first tap, the Shipley was at Emmet's dock and had water in the hose. The fire was in Johnson's "Farmer's Hotel," on Antrim street. A spark from the chimney ignited the shingles. A pail of water was all that was necessary to extinguish it.

But Chief Lamphear, engineer Voit, and the department demonstrated the fact that they know their business, and can be depended upon in trouble.

Good for the boys!

N. T. GASSETTE DEAD.

The Distinguished Mason Is Found Dead in Pasadena

NORMAN T. GASSETTE, of Chicago, through whose indefatigable labors the great Masonic temple was built, died, and who stood almost preeminent in Masonry throughout the United States, died at his home of pneumonia after an illness of but a few days. The news of his death was received by his brethren in Chicago Saturday morning, and it was a shock to the craft throughout the country, who cherished toward the founder of the great Masonic temple the utmost respect.

LAWRENCE BARGET.

NORMAN T. GASSETTE was born in Ogdensburg, N. Y., on April 4, 1838. His father was an Irishman and his mother of Scotch descent. His mother did not live to gain from the world the fame and fortune which her son achieved, but she lived to see the success after his faults removed so thinly, while he was young, that he could see the hand of God in the guidance of his steps and be had to such implacable wills as to be successful. His father was the leading character of the city and was a man of great wealth and influence. He was a Democrat and a Catholic. The family was well known and had a good name. Young Gassette was educated in the Ogdensburg academy and later at the leading theater of the city, and was a boy of great promise. He was fond of the drama and had a good voice. He was a great admirer of Edwin Booth, and was fond of the stage. He was a boy of great energy and ambition, and was ever ready to do a good turn for his friends. He was a boy of great promise and had a good name. He was a boy of great promise and had a good name. He was a boy of great promise and had a good name

We Are Not Helpless.

The naval battle in Valparaiso Bay, just reported by the telegraph is an opportunely instructive event. The recall of Baron Fava by the Italian government has precipitated so much adverse comment as to cut navy and our coast defenses—or absence of them—in comparison with the huge battle ships of the Italian navy, that some nuthinking people may be led to suppose that the Italian ships would be able to come across the Atlantic, deliberately take positions off our seaports, and bang away at us until they have reduced our cities to piles of brick and stone and kindling wood. The Italian ships are being measured at their maximum state of effectiveness, which estimate of their power presupposes cowardly idleness upon our part. But the angry Yankee has never been known to quail before heavy odds, and it must not for one moment be supposed that an enemy would be permitted to empty the magazines of a fleet into our cities without being molested during the attack.

Victory does not always crown the efforts of the strongest combatant; and in modern warfare a single shell of terrible potentiality may be the means of deciding a naval battle. In the battle in Valparaiso Bay, just reported, an armed tug or gunboat, was blown out of water by a well-directed shell from the warship Blanco. Previous to this incident of the fight, a fish torpedo directed at the Florence missed her and blew into atoms a large floating dock. An incident of this fight that illustrates the ability of shore batteries to do effective work was the blowing out of the deck of the sloop-of-war O'Higgins by a shell from the fort.

An attacking fleet would find our dynamite cruiser Vesuvius a dangerous antagonist; and we also have heavy guns that throw shells weighing 2,000 pounds a distance of good for the American cause in the twinkling of an eye. Ericsson's Destroyer is ready for trial, and our naval officers would not be averse to making experiments with her in actual warfare. Despite our neglect as to a navy, and coast-defense, we would be able to make the season very warm for the Italian ships if they attempted to try their power on us.

If Italy "wants da won" why not give her the Louisiana lottery and balance accounts?

If the Italian war scare will induce Americans to tour less in their own country, it will be productive of much good.

A bushel of wheat may be exchanged to-day for twenty pounds of sugar. This is one of the immediate benefits of the McKinley bill. Wheat goes up in its real value, from the producer's and consumer's standpoint, while sugar goes down to where the laborer can indulge in its sanitized use.

The cowboys of Kansas are evidently spoiling for a fight. Secretary Blaine has received the following dispatch from Kansas: "A hundred thousand Kansas cowboys would like to spend the summer in Rome. Can you furnish transportation?" Would not they "make Rome howl," though?

The Mexican government is in correspondence with the department of state at Washington on the subject of a reciprocity treaty. M. Romero, the Mexican minister, is authority for that statement. The United States is attracting its neighbors by its trade policy as needles are attracted to a magnet, or the magnetic needle to the earth's pole.

It has been noted as a significant fact that in the New Orleans massacre the following classes of citizens were absent:

1. Irishmen; not a representative Irishman of the city being in the organized body that did the deadly work.

2. There were no Germans in the band.

3. No old soldiers were in the scrape. The young democracy, as it is called, has all the honor of the deed.

Evidences multiply that the recall of Baron Fava is not a much more serious affair than a trick of Italian politics. Sig Crispi, who was about six weeks ago relieved of the official burden which had weighed upon him as premier, is a most uncomfortable antagonist of the new administration and ever since the New Orleans affair he and his followers have presistently demanded to know what Premier Rudini was going to do about it. The Italian population is excited, and Rudini pays a strong diplomatic compliment to both it and Crispi when he asks them from getting away from his embarrassment. There is apparently more Italian than one at the bottom of the trouble.

Glass Made By Lightning.

"Did you ever see the diameter of a lightning flash measured?" asked a geologist. "Well, here is the case which once enclosed a flash of lightning, fitting it exactly, so that you can see just how big it was. This is called a 'fulgurite' or 'lightning tube,' and its material it is made of is glass. I will tell you how it was and its character; but though it took only a fraction of a second to turn it out.

"When a bolt of lightning strikes a bed of sand it plunges downward into the sand for a distance less or greater, transforming simultaneously into glass the silica in the material through which it passes. Thus, by its great heat, it forms at once a glass tube of precisely its own size. Now and then such a tube, known as a 'fulgurite,' is found and dug up. Some fulgurites have been followed into the sand by excavation for nearly thirty feet then very is interior diameter from the size of a quill to three inches or more, according to the force of the flash.

"But fulgurites are not alone produced in sand; they are found also in solid rock, though very naturally a slight depth and frequently existing merely as a thin glassy coating on the surface. Such fulgurites occur in astonishing abundance on the summit of Little Ararat in Armenia. The rock is soft and so porous that blocks a foot long can be obtained, perforated in all directions by little tubes filled with bottle-green glass formed from the fused rock. There is a small specimen in the National Museum which has the appearance of having been heated by the turned; the holes made by the worm subsequently filled with glass.

"Some wonderful fulgurites were found by Humboldt on the high Nevada de Toluca in Mexico. Masses of the rock were covered with a thin layer of green glass, its peculiar shimmer in the sun led Humboldt to ascend the precipitous peak at the risk of his life."

Haggard's Literary Venture.

Me entrance into literature was purely an accident, says Rider Haggard, speaking of himself. Ever after my return from Africa I had an idea of writing the romance of what I went to Africa as secretary to one of the governors. I was in this country at the time of the war, and left disgusted at the outcome. My methods of bookmaking differed but little from those of other authors. A writer must, to do justice to a subject, have a thorough knowledge of his plot and characters before touching pen to paper. He must, too, have collected an immense amount of material to which to draw.

While in Africa I made a close study of the habits of the native and the country generally. In consequence, when I returned to England I was in a position to describe that I had seen and learned. Lone meerschm, with a sufficient amount of romance blended with them, are about the sum of in my value of African life.

As I is already stated, my entrance into literature was due to chance. While practicing at the law I conceived the idea of writing a work on politics. This my sudden effort, proved the coastal. I was induced to write romance.

"Dawn" was my first effort. Then followed other romances, including "Jess," which has been the most successful of my books. I think my novels have sold well in Africa. In the past, I have been the productive, and in the future will publish but one book a year.

HOW THE BEAR FOOLED MR. GREENE.

An Ex-Cowboy Gives a Surprise by a Bear Hunt Lassoed.

Once a year a party of crack sleuths start from Hiawatha for a hunt in the wilds of Colorado, that is the party at one time was George Greene, an expert with a lariat, and although a tickle, middle-aged stockbroker at Lincoln, he has never had a chance to test his skill with his favorite weapon. He was quick with a rifle, but when he began to attack with a lariat he disclaimed to take advantage of his foe with powder and ball. Mr. Greene developed his wonderful skill by long service on ranches as a cowboy.

The hunting party was mounted one morning early for a day in the saddle, when Mr. Greene saw a large bear making tracks across a clearing for the woods. He was a master horseman, and his horse was not quite him, being well bred and fearless. With a cowboy yell he clapped his spurs to his "partner" and away they went like mad to head him off, and successful in doing so. Swish-sh went the lariat through the air. The bear snorted, set back, and the astonished bear was roughly jerked into a standing position, with a taut lasso about his neck and in under the fore paw. There was a wild scuffle and though the brute pulled and clawed about the treashing horse held him tight. After a few seconds the bear quit trying to get away, and thoughtful looked matters over. He glanced along the rope, and saw Mr. Greene grinning in the saddle on the horse at the end of it. Hiwrap at it all was terrified to see. Mr. Gre.ne's nerve was beyond anything he had ever thought of. Growling fiercely he proved himself equal to the emergency. Reeding out a 20 paw after another, as a sailor would, he rapidly pulled horse and man toward him. His great strength made the task easy for him and they were his "meat," instead of him being theirs. The horse was struggling now, and the change in the program was anything but satisfactory to Mr. Greene. Quick as he made up his mind that he must cut the lariat, that cause the bear from the sheath at his side, the throug was in two, one fell the bear, and before he could attend to business again at the old stand, Mr. Greene's gallant horse got both out of his reach.

Brain trotted on to his death, every disaster is the party who has seen the fun pouring a bullet into his body. To Mr. Greene's credit he told them he should have liked to have seen the "bar" go free; it deserved only to die, if need be, with an equal chance for life with its assailant.—Kansas City Star.

The Life For a Singer.

"What is the best food for a singer?" is a question very often asked of me, and of all professional singers, writes Mme. Albani-Gye, in The Ladies' Home Journal. I reply: "The plainest food is by far the best." Good, plain, but nourishing food for that is the best for health, and to be well in health is to be well in voice, and good health is absolutely necessary for good singing. Some few things should be always avoided, such as nuts, for instance, which affect the throat as well as the digestion. To lead a regular life is also absolutely essential, and youngsters, and, indeed, all—artistes, if they wish to excel, must live for their art alone, and must give up a great many "pleasures", but if they are in it should do, as they and we know, they do not count. There will have their reward for all sacrifices. To be artistes, they should be artistes—go, wherever possible, to hear and to see fine singing and fine acting; endeavor to see fine pictures, fine statues; read clever books and the biographies of great men and great historical characters; to live, in fact, in an atmosphere of art and of intellect, which will help them far more than anything else. Let them be disposed to think in their own artistic career.

An Electric Car That Leaks.

The electric street-cars between Altoona and Birmingham-Tuna, have been a source of pride and wonder as well to the people of the two towns. Never a country visitor comes to see his relatives but he is taken for a ride on the lightning cars, and the workings are explained to him. Some of the cars "leak," and the metallic parts are highly charged with the electric fluid. One car especially is noted for this. The conductor and those who know the car never have had an accident, but people who have not been frightened a need of legs scientic' and generally at the other side of the camp, near the horses. They slowly worked from my seat to the car, and started, as her feet touched the iron dropsill she gave a startled scream and a look of blank amazement spread over her features as she remarked: "Something in the matter with my limbs; I can't move them." The conductor gave her a little push into the car, and a sigh of relief escaped her as she sank into a seat and blushed like an Italian sunset.

The next one to enter was a big Irish schoolwoman. She was fat and jolly, and her size required an effort on her part to squeeze through the door. She planted both feet on the iron plate and then screamed: "Holy Moses! my legs is full of jelly!" The conductor didn't laugh, for he had to give a job to push her off the sill. Then came a gentleman, whose little dog followed him. The dog's feet struck the door sill, his tail flopped and bristled his hair on his back rose up, and with a pitiful howl he dropped back, jumped off the car, and has not been seen since.

The man with rubbers on smiles a superior sort of smile as he steps in, and this angers the conductor. To get even with him he asks for the fare just as the rubber shod man goes inside the door. Then the man with the bellicose nose comes in, and the conductor asks him if he has any fare. The man with the bellicose nose is taken aback, and a stern compression of the lips and a muttered oath is the only token the conductor has that his little scheme worked. The sensation is not so all-fired bad, but its suddenness is apt to take the resolution out of a man so quickly as anything. People who are troubled with rheumatism are generally asked in the door during the rush of the day, and declare that the shock is beneficial.

Historical Doll.

A historical doll recently exhibited in New York is copied from a Valentine of Fredbrand II. Also of Denmark. It is dressed in green coat of a dress satin, which has been the most auspicious of my books. I think my novels have sold well in Africa. In the past, I have been the productive, and in the future will publish but one book a year.

AN INDIAN ADVENTURE.

The Remarkably Vexatious Story Related by a U. P. Railroader.

The Union Pacific express had just left Truckee, bound east. The conductor had punched the tickets of two passengers who had boarded at that point, and was again at liberty to pursue the thread of one of the many narratives in which I had been an interested listener.

"Yes, they were lean times, 'round up," said he, "when I was a young man then and an chipper as any of 'em. I reckon I'd be. Plenty lights 'round this country, too, and they lasted a white man like pizen. That reminds me of a little adventure I had which will give you an idea of how bitter an Injin can hate.

"I was down to Silver City in the fall of '81. I had just returned from a successful prospecting tour, and was sort of 'lounging' around waitin' for something to turn up. I was getin' about sick of doin' nothin', when who should I meet on the street one day but Bill Winter, the partner of many of my adventures.

"'Hullo, Captain,' says he, 'just the man I'm looking for. Got anything to do?'

"'Well, no,' say I; 'I'm kinder resting.' 'Anything startling out?'

"'Yes,' says Bill, 'there's a prospectin' party down here waiting for a captain. I told better take charge of it.'

"'Where is the party to go?' asks I. 'Some directions are we aimin' for?'

"'East, following the course of the Carson Rivers to the fork, near the lake, then towards the Augusta range,' says Bill, and then just anywhere.'

"'Whoop! here's a go,' says I. 'Kinder guess I will go,' says I. I liked the adventure like a book.

"In three days we were provisioned for a two months' trip. Four fellows and a heavy wagon completed the outfit. There were seven in the party myself. I always did hate the number thirteen. We had a little trouble in the start of the party, but said nothin'.

"We made twenty-seven miles the first day, and at sundown went to sleep along the river. After supper we pulled straws for picket duty, and Bob Wanless drew the shortest for the first two hours. Bill Winters for the second. A pull at the pipe made us all sleepy and by 9 o'clock the camp was quiet.

"I guess I'd been sleepin' about an hour when I was startled by an unearthly shriek. Others were wakened too, and we jumped on our feet and made for the direction where Bob had been posting on guard an hour before. The moon was sinkin' bright, and we could see for a long distance. Bob had been stabbed in the back and was dead. Slowly raising the bloody arrow-end of a long lance, we found it had entered the left side of his heart. We had scampered away with Bob's dying shriek. Bob, I guess, wasn't the only one. We found a man, who was evidently a Injun, with a long gold pipe in his mouth and grunting around the camp. A fellow wouldn't believe Injun but unless he saw it. Bill Winter, the partner of many a adventure, was the first to see him. Bill was a big, hearty, jolly fellow, and he was the last man to think of anything unusual happening.

"The following night, Bill, my old partner, gave me a quiet hand grip and he laughed as he said: 'Old pal, I was in the wrong. Injun is a Injun.'

"Bill's death was the last Injun I saw in the vicinity of Silver City. I was down there a year after, and I heard that the Injun had been killed by a party of white men who had been robbed by him. I guess he was a bad Injun."

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXXIII.—Continued.

In order to do this, the household goods, as well as the contents of the table, were to be sold at auction, with the elegant house and grounds would be just inside the limits of an agent to be disposed of as soon as available offers should be made.

These things were all accomplished in due time, and on the morning of the sale was ready to call Dr. Elsie—condescending, as we must confess, all spite, together with Tom, who was retained in their service, had certainly had her share of humiliating penance from a considerable distance, for the sake of her husband, who was now on the down, in order to free after his journey from Yonkers.

Now they were stepping away from shore, as Edith noticed that every breath in the father from drawing a relief him, and before they arrived at their destination his old energy, enthusiasm, and assurance returned, and his other attributes were also exceedingly improved.

By the time they reached Schoenberg Hall Sir Pitman was able to walk around with a cane, and really seemed to have taken a new lease upon life.

With not Elsie married this change, and would be saw how entirely happy she was than to be restored to his own home and rightful place, and was able to focus or lamentable name and rightful title, he thought, and yet he felt that he might be spared long yet to enjoy them, for his constitution was good, he wasn't old by his own reckoning, as it was an unlucky one, a fairer fortune's blessing.

He's his heart to feel that no hope of permanent change for the better could be possible, but these days were in no mistake, therefore, he remained his wonderfulness prospect of his being standing ready to aid in that endeavor, as for no Providence would permit, check the great weakness he felt, were which seem so near to perishing, he felt all this enthusiasm, should take place.

Edith was very happy in the consciousness of the power which she possessed over her father, and was very grateful for the purpose Esther felt on the day that Edith had left her, and since is left her, and a new but rightful name and inheritance.

This news he had not written, preferring to tell it in person.

Sir Pitman was delighted with his fortune daughter-in-law, for Earle could see rest until he had taken Ethel to the Hall, in order to show her, amid surrounding, His feeble health made this visit perfectly gloomy and certainly gave great pleasure to the old gentleman. From that time he so called Earle, insisted for ward to the wedding-day, which was finally decided on for the morning of the twentieth of October, with profound pleasure.

A few days after their arrival at the Hall, Sir Pitman said to his son that he felt sufficiently recovered from his fatigue to visit the ruins, and see the room so long the prison of his unfortunate brother, and leaving an hour, he proceeded to the mound of place.

It was well satisfied disposition attended him on this and visit, as he was greatly overcome by the sad, than so vividly told of the great sufferings one his had moved had endured for twenty-five long years.

The tears he shed over each symbol of that long captivity were almost unnerving, and Earle had to take him away from the place, assuring that all these harrowing reminiscences should be reserved for the place. If not in his fault, he thought, he would be sure to be had passed away.

But to his great surprise, after he had retired and bedroom calm, Sir Pitmyo said unexpectedly:

"I never, never wish to go there again. Now I know the old place, I can imagine Edward's pain, the old refused just with the same as I suppose.

"Father, I am resolved to bear you way to Tom's place to be full of sadness to be allowed to stand. I wish all to be bright and beautiful before my eyes, and I know Tom's place.

"Father, dear, Tom, Earle, what you would like to see in their place. The lower two rooms in the beautiful oak, as mahogany, and something ornamental take the place of inner furniture.

Earle waited for no further orders, but ran out to the carriage and ordered it to be once described all evidences of that singular spot, and the rooms were adorned for pictures and statuary stood where they had been, without, but neglect and decay.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"MY DEAR MADAM:

The time for opening the package left by Ethel's charge by Mrs. Newergall was now fast approaching, it being the first of October, and I presume with the negro feel considerably anxious in regard to its contents, upon the day appointed, I repair to Schoenberg Hall, where I shall be joined by Mr. Newergall, who should she find it necessary to furnish me with the proper name and rightful title, I shall be happy to do so, and present that to might be spared long to enjoy myself, for, for his constitution is good, he wasn't old by his own reckoning, as it was an unlucky one, a fairer fortune's blessing.

Now, dear madam, I have the honor of your cousin's charge to be the bearer of the package to be opened in the presence of the old gentleman. From that time he so called Earle, insisted for ward to the wedding-day, which was finally decided on for the morning of the twentieth of October, with profound pleasure.

"Father, I am resolved to bear you way to Tom's place to be full of sadness to be allowed to stand. I wish all to be bright and beautiful before my eyes, and I know Tom's place.

"Father, dear, Tom, Earle, what you would like to see in their place. The lower two rooms in the beautiful oak, as mahogany, and something ornamental take the place of inner furniture.

Earle waited for no further orders, but ran out to the carriage and ordered it to be once described all evidences of that singular spot, and the rooms were adorned for pictures and statuary stood where they had been, without, but neglect and decay.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"MY DEAR MADAM:

The time for opening the package left by Ethel's charge by Mrs. Newergall was now fast approaching, it being the first of October, and I presume with the negro feel considerably anxious in regard to its contents, upon the day appointed, I repair to Schoenberg Hall, where I shall be joined by Mr. Newergall, who should she find it necessary to furnish me with the proper name and rightful title, I shall be happy to do so, and present that to might be spared long to enjoy myself, for, for his constitution is good, he wasn't old by his own reckoning, as it was an unlucky one, a fairer fortune's blessing.

Now, dear madam, I have the honor of your cousin's charge to be the bearer of the package to be opened in the presence of the old gentleman. From that time he so called Earle, insisted for ward to the wedding-day, which was finally decided on for the morning of the twentieth of October, with profound pleasure.

TRACK TALK.

Matters Rapidly Progressing.--A Railroad Meeting at Petoskey.

Last Friday evening, General Manager Heald and Attorney Wm Alden Smith, of the C. & W. M., were at Petoskey, and attended a railroad meeting. Mr. Heald told the people that if they would secure right of way through the Village to Bay View, and furnish grounds for depot buildings, work would be begun within eight days thereafter. A committee was appointed to bring about the result desired, and, as the estimated cost is only about $5,000, there is no doubt that Charlevoix will be connected with Petoskey by rail by July 1st. Mr. Meech, who attended the meeting, reports that the meeting was enthusiastically in favor of accepting the terms.

Grand Traverse Herald: The C. & W. M. surveyors are doing some preliminary work here, this week, on the northern extension, getting ready for the graders.

The Commissioner of Railroads has issued the following notice: "The Chicago and North Michigan Railroad Company has filed a map of the proposed route of its road through the counties of Grand Traverse, Kalkaska, Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet, for the approval of the Board of Railroad Crossings. Said line of road passes through Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Bellaire, the grounds of the Kalamazoo and Chicago Resort associations at Charlevoix, the village of Petoskey, and the grounds of the Bay View Resort Association. The hearing of the application for the approval thereof is set for Tuesday April 7, 1891, at 2 p. m., at the office of the Commissioner of Railroads in the City of Lansing, at which time and place any person interested will be heard upon said application if they shall so elect. By order of the Board."

Lake City Republican: In about another week the surveyors will be put on the line of the union of the T., A. A. & Mackinaw Railroad, starting from Marion, crossing the Clam river at or near Falmouth, and from there using the old survey, nearly so, of the defunct D., C. & E. R. R. Co. Engineer John White who went over the line as far as Moorestown and returned by way of Lake City and Cadillac, last week He was pleased with the route, and thinks the line will be pushed to the Manistee river this season. The survey passes to the east of Missaukee's bob four miles, which would eventually be the ruin of our lively young city, if the road is allowed to go on that line. We cannot conceive why our business men will remain so passive and indifferent to their interests. If it is built there our predictions are that in another five years there will be plenty of empty houses in Lake City, rapidly decaying, while her streets will become mere goose pastures. Citizens, "put your ears a little nearer to China," as Norm. Cooper says, "and hear the rumblings."

Grand Rapids Democrat: Petoskey is in the throes of excitement and anxiety for another railroad. An enthusiastic meeting of its prominent business men and citizens was held Friday night for the purpose of taking action toward inducing the Chicago & West Michigan railroad to continue its proposed extension from Charlevoix to Petoskey. General Manager Heald and William Alden Smith were present. Mr. Heald offered to build the road, begin construction from that end and have the line in operation this season if such a thing is possible, if the citizens of Petoskey would furnish the right of way through Emmet county and terminal grounds in Petoskey. The proposition was regarded as very fair as compared with the demands usually made for projected railroads. It was promptly accepted, a resolution to that effect passed, and a committee appointed to begin soliciting the right of way and terminal facilities at once. The people are unanimous in their desire to secure the road and the work was taken hold of with enthusiasm. It is expected it will be completed in time to allow construction to begin as early in the spring as the weather will permit. Part of the construction will be very difficult and expensive. One cut alone will require the removal of 200,000 yards of clay. Mr. Heald and Mr. Smith walked over four miles of the proposed route through deep snow, to which they sank to the knees at almost every step. They found the woods full of contractors who were looking over the ground with a view to making bids. Archie McDonald, the well known contractor of this city, was among them. That part of the extension between Traverse City and Charlevoix is almost ready for letting contracts. The engineer's department expects to have the specification ready this week, when bids will be advertised for at once.

Harbor Springs is getting ready to draw the northern rearrier over from Petoskey and Bay View. It has organized a brass band and the new uniforms have been added, since which time, a Petoskey man has been heard to say: "If the rearriers go over the bay there won't remain long, provided the band goes in its wake."

MYSTERIOUS SHOOTING

Geo A. Sherwood Shot at Through a Window of the Savings Bank

On Friday evening last, soon after seven o'clock, Geo. Sherwood, Teller and book-keeper of the Charlevoix Savings Bank, entered the bank and went to the back room to light the lamp that is left burning in the front office during the night. He had lighted the lamp and was in the act of putting the burned match in the stove, when a bullet came through the side window, passing a few inches in front of his breast, and lodged in the back of a law-book that was lying on a desk.

Mr. Sherwood at once extinguished the light, and as soon as he could collect himself, unlocked the two rear doors, and went out. No person was in sight. The shot was heard by several on the street.

When the matter became generally known, there was great excitement, intensified by a knowledge that Mr. Sherwood had been shot owed by some unknown person for some time past. He has been compelled to go around after dark for several weeks past and the authorities, as well as private citizens have been on the alert to capture the prowler.

What object any person can have in shooting Geo. Sherwood is beyond the comprehension of our citizens.

Marshal Pratt, of Petoskey, has adopted the plan of sentencing his impecunious boarders to hard labor at the village wood pile. A good idea.

Grand Rapids Democrat: The story that the extended C. & W. M. railroad is going to divide the Charlevoix resorts is pronounced a wicked canard. The road will hug the shore of Pine lake and leave the resort in its natural beauty.

Marcelona Herald: To those who think that a piece of land in Antrim county don't amount to much, we will refer them to what Henry Sumner has done with one yoke of oxen on section 26 of Kearney township. He has skidded and hauled to Bellaire this winter 102,000 feet of maple and elm logs for which he received $425. Out of this amount he paid for cutting, $70. He made four trips a day of 22 miles. Sixty thousand feet of the timber was elm.

15 acres and the remaining forty-two thousand feet was maple taken from 10 acres. A pretty good winter's work for one man, one yoke of oxen and twenty-five acres of land.

POISONED! $50.00 REWARD

We print the picture of Fireman H. L. Stenning of engine Co. No. 18, situated at 835 W. 12th St., Chicago, Ill. Mr. Stenning had been suffering for several years from Kidney and Liver Complaints, which finally poisoned his blood with Rheumatism. The following is Mr. Stenning's own statement of his Terrible Suffering: "During the time of the big Chicago fire I was taken down with a severe cold. My Liver and Kidneys combined giving a great deal of trouble and finally poisoned my blood with rheumatism. The pains in my back were so terrible that I can not describe them. At every quick attempt to rise from a sitting position the pain would become so severe that it would almost take my breth away. During the many years of my suffering I did not know what it was to get a good night's sleep, and when I did sleep it was due to sheer exhaustion. I tried physicians and medicines, but they could not even give me relief. I commenced using Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic Cure after I had lost all faith in everything. I had used this medicine only a few days when my pain was all gone and before I had used three bottles of it I was entirely well. I am feeling better now than I have felt in many years. My kidneys give me no more bother. In fact, I feel stronger and more vigorous than ever before. Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic cure is a long felt want. I have since induced many of my friends to use this truly great medicine and it has done wonderful work in every case. Anyone doubting the truth of this statement can see me any day at the engine house. It will always afford me great pleasure to say a good word for Abbott Bros' remedy." 50.00 Reward for any case of Rheumatism or Neuralgia we can not cure. Sold only by F. G. HINES & Co., Charlevoix, Mich., who can furnish local testimonials.

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER I.

THE NIGHT AT THE CROSSING.

"Chub, I don't know what on him if you dare." I'll pack bullet through the right man's head."

The crowd fell back before Chubby Hawkins' eyes.

"Boys, some days know she would accept an offer." he thought, but he spoke.

Chub Dawson held her head erect, defiant, her cheeks burned with emotion. Her lips quivered, but her voice was strong, that affected an aspect for the passion that blazed out in the defiant threat to the crowd there nearest her to swell in anger.

"You are a lot of cowards. A great crowd of you looking on and not one man more. If he had a fair show—as he will have—I'd back the best man your crowd can pick to call up against him." Her voice was low and sweet. If Shaw was a gambler there now, I'll take a hand in myself."

"Shaw! Shaw! Shaw! Shaw!" the crowd yelled.

"Yes, I'm a fool, the best thing you can do is to run out of the town."

The crowd was beginning to be sorry, but the resentment in which color edged the sympathy of more than one there.

Besides, the crowd was ready now to laugh at anything.

They had witnessed enough bloodshed for one night, and there was a reaction set in the scene, unexpected as it was, proved funny to more than one.

The crowd fell back before Chubby Hawkins' eyes.

Women there knew she would accept an offer, but they didn't know how to speak.

Chub Dawson held her head erect, defiant, her cheeks burned with emotion. Her lips quivered, but her voice was strong, that affected an aspect for the passion that blazed out in the defiant threat to the crowd there nearest her to swell in anger.

"You are a lot of cowards. A great crowd of you looking on and not one man more. If he had a fair show—as he will have—I'd back the best man your crowd can pick to call up against him." Her voice was low and sweet. If Shaw was a gambler there now, I'll take a hand in myself."

"Shaw! Shaw! Shaw! Shaw!" the crowd yelled.

"Yes, I'm a fool, the best thing you can do is to run out of the town."

The crowd was beginning to be sorry, but the resentment in which color edged the sympathy of more than one there.

Besides, the crowd was ready now to laugh at anything.

They had witnessed enough bloodshed for one night, and there was a reaction set in the scene, unexpected as it was, proved funny to more than one.

The crowd looked at each other sheepishly, and shouts of derision began with Chub and Dan Hash left.

"You had to fight, I suppose," said Chub, as he looked first at the ground, then at Dan Hash.

Dan's face was marked. There was a red patch on one cheek, and his clothes were covered with dust—dust that had not come from the road.

"I couldn't help it."

"Dan did not apologize—did not explain. He simply told the truth.

"I suppose," you tell how it happened. You generalized with Ned Monk."

"No. He generalized with me."

"Couldn't you get away from him?"

"Why should I try to avoid any man?"

Dan swung at Chub in a way that brought the hand to her cheek, not knowing it Chub grew, or pretended to grow, very angry at such a thing.

"Yes, it is a nice way for men to meet and greet friends—to hit one another in the face and—and—and scratch—and—and—and, I suppose."

Chub paused for lack of words to express her disgust.

"I tell you it was no more my fault than it was yours. Ned Monk was drunk. He was looking for a fight. I didn't know I had to talk to the whole community to walk from one end of two of them, and the crowd was here, shooting at a mark. I was sitting right where you are standing, when first Ned Monk jumped at me. He had a pistol in his off, and when he didn't apologize I was he was half drunk. Then he was beaten—they all beat him shooting—and he wanted to fight and pulled out. When he held he could whip me, what might I do under those? Eh?"

"No," said Chub in a low tone, with flashing eyes.

"I didn't. I stood up; they all gathered around, and, before I knew what I had done on his back. I knocked him down three times in succession. And then his brother Bill came at me. I knocked him down, too. I had them down, when one of the gang broke with a spoon in the face of Bill's horse."

Dan pointed to his eye.

"That knocked me down—then three of them were on me at one time. That was what made me pull the gun, and shoot Ned Monk. If I had shot him through the heart, I would have served him right, the coward."

"Yes, you served him right," said Chub, admiringly. "Well, I didn't know the ins and outs of it. I believe you. Dan, I'm sorry I ever saw you. Dan Hash, than the white coward."

"I'm obliged to you, Miss Dawson," said Dan. "I'm sorry my name's just Dan."

"Well, Chub, then. I owe you my life."

"Nonsense. Nothing of the kind. I just happened to come over in time—that's all. I thought our Ben was here again."

Chub paused. She could not, would not tell Dan that the truth was she had heard the shouts of the combatants as she stood on the porch of her home.

There was no one in the house but herself.

To pick up the rifle she was familiar with, and to mount her pony on a gear, near her over the low hill between her farm and the road, the farm, and usually occupied less than two minutes.

She had gone over the hill between her farm and the road, the farm, and usually occupied less than two minutes.

Her hair, worn in loose curls, was flying over her shoulders, her bonnet had fallen from on her neck, and her face was set with scorn and passion as she mounted those to divide.

Half a score had gathered about Dan Hash; they thought he had murder, but Dan managed to get his back against the smithy, and, was striking out right and left when Chub Dawson interposed in the very nick of time.

"You'd make him go to our house till an comes home, Mr. Hash."

Dan looked astonished.

It was good advice. The chances were that if he met any of the crowd committed by the Monks they would resume the quarrel, and he would rather suffer at their hands or be compelled to kill some of them in self-defense.

But Dan's sober second thought governed him.

"No, I am obliged to you for the offer, but I'll not let anything prevent me from attending to the business that brought me here. I'll go back the way I came."

"You know best," said Chub, stiffly. Then she looked at him correctly, turned and hastened home. Dan Hash looked after her.

"Who don't know how much I've saved her. What a splendid woman she is!" Dan added to himself as he sat down again and sighed.

The landlord, who had remained in his house all this time, looking on, came out.

Then his wife, an old woman, much older than the landlord, who had married for her fine property, stood in the doorway, looking at Dan Hash.

"I told you you'd find it rough trying to go the mountains and the settled with a rough.

"Well, of course, than one finds it rough," replied Dan, civilly.

"Those people who are big—some—"

"Those people who are big," repeated Dan. "Too fine. Well, I wear a large shirt. I keep my face clean and I mind my own business, Mr. Parks."

"You are—you do, indeed. Same time, the hand 'round the rifle thinks you're kind of upset."

"Well, I think so. American citizen is entitled to be upset when he is shot."

"Tan not agreeing with the boys, Mr. Hash, do, no. Not well."

"Mr. Potts?" Hash spoke sharply. His voice expressed exhaustion. Mr. Potts, listening in the doorway, thought he was "awful high-strung." "Mr. Hash, I don't care the price of a plum cake for the opinion of the boys in this town. I mean. Respectable people I respect—I don't waste time on an object. I'm better things, more important things to occupy my mind, and I have at times to say this to the 'hops' when you see them again."

"Ef—Ef—ought to tend you, Mr. Hash, but these men have been hard on you. Not to see—why, I heard this morning as Ned Monk's friends intend send both county over to the crowes."

"What's that, Mr. Potts?"

"Why, they're goin' to 'Squire Mowat to a jowdy water—some—some kind of place, I reckon. So you'll not meet up with Ned Monk."

"Thank you," said Dan Hash, as he started to be back in the house. He was before table.

As he walked down the road rapidly, the landlord shouted his final shot.

"Don't make no trouble goes out—this town. Don't make no trouble. There'll be trouble enough out it. That young man's spoiled with a great powerful beginning."

Dan Hash walked rapidly along the road. He was resolved to keep his word to Chub. It was of importance to see the directors. He had worked hard for the place, and cared more. He could not, would not turn back; once what might be said reached in the district until he was compelled to resign.

A little more than a mile from the crossing the road dipped suddenly in a ravine—a dirt between the mountain sides. There was very little water in the ravine, and man and beast well-trained the sparkling clear water that challenged them there. Dan Hash had brought one horse down to the ravine, and, even now he promised himself a good drink when he should be challenged there. Dan Hash had thought one horse down to the ravine, and, even now he promised himself a good drink when he should be challenged there.

Just beside the spring, concealed by the thick bushes near it, sat the Monk brothers and a third man, who was not their cousin.

Bill Monk's was not a bad man. He was, unfortunately, easily influenced, and when he had a glass of liquor under his vest was as irresponsible as a lunatic.

The Monk brothers were taking in low tones to his brother, who was resting in the shade.

"Scratch," said Ned Monk, "whatever happens, you must be as silent as the grave."

"Or maybe you'll go to an early grave," said Bill Monk, sententiously.

"Exactly," echoed Ned.

"Well, I'll be silent," said Scratch. "I never told on you yet, did I?"

"Well, I'll be silent," said Scratch. "I never told on you yet, did I?"

"Well, said Ned, looking at his brother, "you know, I believe Scratch would rather have his tongue cut out or his eyes burned out than give you away."

Scratch shivered and cried to laugh. "Oh, here, now, you fellows know I'm silent as the grave. Don't talk that."

"Now, whatever," said Ned Monk.

He was interrupted as the road crossed it, looked over to the corners, and shouted:

"Scratch—mind. Mum's the word. We can't stay here. Drop the grave round here soon."

Scratch shivered again.

He knew they were there for murder. Who was the victim? Dan Hash? He would help he must help. Scratch said to himself, he would help he must help. Scratch was a coward in the sense that he would do a mean trick even smaller dissembling.

"Scratch," said Bill Monk, sternly.

"Scratch," said Ned Monk, sternly.

"Scratch," said Bill Monk, sternly.

"Stop, stop," said Ned Monk, as he brought his hand heavily down on the listener's knee, "we gotta go inside Dan Hash. Bill, come down the road. Hell! he here directly. If you don't behave yourself you'll get into an awful mess. Scratch, you come on the gang home with a spoon in the face of your horse."

Dan pointed to his eye.

"That knocked me down—then three of them were on me at one time. That was what made me pull the gun, and shoot Ned Monk. If I had shot him through the heart, I would have served him right, the coward."

"Yes, you served him right," said Chub, admiringly. "Well, I didn't know the ins and outs of it. I believe you. Dan, I'm sorry I ever saw you. Dan Hash, than the white coward."

"I'm obliged to you, Miss Dawson," said Dan. "I'm sorry my name's just Dan."

"Well, Chub, then. I owe you my life."

"Nonsense. Nothing of the kind. I just happened to come over in time—that's all. I thought our Ben was here again."

EASTER SUNDAY SERMON

"COME, SEE THE PLACE WHERE THE LORD LAY."

Text of the Eloquent Discourse Delivered by the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage—Subject for Sermon, "The Split Mountains."

The text of Dr. Talmage's discourse was Matthew xxviii, 6, "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

Visiting any great city, we are not satisfied until we have shown, looked at its cemetery. We examine all the styles of monuments, mausoleums, sculpture, crypts, and sculpture. Here lies the man who made the money, under a corner lot here a poet, not there an inventor, in some other place a great philanthropist. But with how much greater interest and with more delight and curiosity we look upon our family plot in the cemetery. In the same way and in a manner of public interest, to the other It is a matter of private and family interest, we have visited the grave at which we hail this morning these are gathered all kinds of experiences interest. At this sepulchre, I have to tell you what I saw when my father was buried a king, a conqueror, an emperor, a prince, a poet, a philosopher, a Christ. Monarch of the universe, but home of our home and hold of our heart, our brother, our sister, our father, our mother, our wife, our child, our husband, our friend, our lover, our Lord Jesus.

It was for surroundings the manner in the suburbs of Jerusalem, a manor owned by a wealthy gentleman by the name of Joseph. He was one of the council of seventy and had condemned Christ, but I think he had voted in the negative. He was a secret disciple, and present at the time of the casting of the lots, he had laid down in the garden of great expense. It was a fine situation, and I suppose it was worth many thousand dollars. Hedges and trees and winding paths underneath the shade of the trees, and fountains in the rock into a cataract, and a little lake, and the whole surrounded by a stone wall, and all around there were the tombs of the rich and of the multitude. After the fairness of the decision and the tombs of the rich and of the multitude. After the fairness of the decision and the tombs of the rich and of the multitude. The ice in the straits is banked in and frozen solid.

Roswell Leavitt has been at home for a few days. He reports fair success in the work of securing right of way, although some parties down toward Williamsburg are rather ungettable.

According to the Grand Traverse Herald there are 757 patients at the asylum, and every ward is crowded, extra beds and cots being used. No more patients can be taken either male or female, except as vacancies occur by reason of death or improvement in condition that will warrant the patient being returned home.

Charlie Kimball and an enormous eagle had an exciting tussle near Alpena the other day. The boy had been disturbing the bird's nest, and after several big swoops the bird dropped almost upon the boy. Charlie grapped the bird by the foot and for several yards he was carried ten feet above the ground. He then managed to get hold of one of the bird's wings and the two fell to the ground, the boy hanging to his prey. The bird measures seven feet between the tips of his wings.

Mr. E. Sellar, of Harbor Springs, is talking of laying his engines built at Cadillac in the future, instead of at Lima, Ohio, where they have heretofore been constructed.—Charlevoix SENTINEL. McAddo & Co., of this city are now engaged in building engines for Mr. Sisty and it is probable that this work will be rapidly increased. The character of the work done by the Cadillac machinists is such as to gain favor from all their patrons and to add materially to the variety and value of their orders.—Cadillac News.

Petoskey Herald, Division Superintendent Simpson and Chief Engineer Johnson of the G. R. & I. R. R. were yesterday to see what arrangements were being made by the C. & W. M. road for a terminus. Just before going to press we learn that the business of Superintendent Simpson and Engineer Johnson meant more than watching the C. & W. M. They state this morning that the C. H. & I. will at once build a branch from near the Armstrong factory down Bear Creek, tapping all the mills on that stream.

Petoskey Democrat. We visited Kirby's new dock to day, about 350 feet is planked. The bridge is 850 feet long and is laid on nine cribs, solidly built, and weighted with stone. The bridge connects with end of the main cribs, which is 50x100, thus making the length from shore to the outer edge 950 feet. This main crib is strongly built of hardwood logs, in twelve compartments, the logs securely fastened and weighted with stone 150 yards of stone having already been put in, and more to be put in before the fall storms. The main pier is set so as to be least exposed to the seas, and is so strongly built, that the builders have no fears of its permanency. Its size gives more than double the room on the old dock, and besides this the bridge is twenty feet wide, four feet wider than the old one. As also of the work done can be obtained from the fact that 250,000 feet of timber have been put into the walls crib, and there will be half a million feet in the whole dock. This dock will be the landing place of the Sun City, Charlevoix and Lansing.

Petoskey Democrat. We receive a brief call from Capt. Vanderhoef Wednesday, and learn from him that the Friant will start on the Harbor Springs, Petoskey, Charlevoix and East Jordan route as soon as the ice goes out. The admirers of this popular steamer will hardly recognize her when she comes out this spring. A light deck has been put on in place of the awning, extending from stem to stern. The wheelhouse and captain's room has been moved forward, leaving nearly the whole of the upper deck free from all obstructions, with the exception of the smoke stack. This not only gives increased room for passengers, but also makes the boat look larger and better. Nothing ba, as yet been done in regard to a new boat on the ferry route.—Surveyors Keep and Wennells, engineer for the G. R. & I. R. R. began yesterday running a line down Bear river for a spur which is to leave the main track at the Armstrong factory, following the west bank of the river past all the mills and factories, and possibly as far as the docks. This will probably hold the freight of the manufacturing institutions, in sight of the new road.——Prof. Sage Ellen has leased a piece of land at the foot of Howard street, and will next week begin the erection of a 30x60 building, with 18-foot posts, which he will fit up with every requisite and appliance as a gymnasium.

Her Argument.

Well sir, not big Genoa is the least—bit big
Its not even half as big as Chicago
Its not about half as big as Boston
Not half as big as Philadelphia
But then, I tell you—that makes all the difference, you see.

No rich—the Genoa is—its just a bookkeeping—commercial
Of course, his salary can't be much; he works for Black & Brown.
I don't say what he ought to take the contract
To start with, but I see how it goes—I did not—but I can for that He isn't taxed at all. He doesn't paint not even one
Not a chance, nor show, indeed, a special taste for anything
Only—I forgot—Genoa was. He smokes more, I think I am positive
But, I love Genoa as I've learned to love Chicago
And, you, he has a temper—he is not an angel, that's the trouble, but I think he's worth Another chance, and I can't help thinking of Genoa—Well, then nothing will. You think I am possessed?
You won't praise myself a slave, and wonder why, then, I let you see how what is to love a man?

—Matthew S. Bridges.

A NOBLE REVENGE.

"I am very sorry that this should have happened, Miss Ethereige; you have met all my requirements in my ideal of a cook. In the establishment of my servants I am forced to be exceedingly careful, almost over-cautious, as you may say. I think you will find your salary quite correct as to the amount."

Mrs. Carter, the smooth-voiced, and gracious proprietress of the Minerva Academy for Young Ladies, smiled as sweetly as if she were not ejecting poor Agnes Etheriege's dependence for daily bread, as she laid the money on the teacher's lap.

"I understand," Agnes said, growing quite white, and with a strange quiver in her voice, "Mr. Lundie has been talking to you."

Mrs. Carter paused an per lips.

"I am not at liberty to give the name of my informant," she said primly, "but the promptitude with which you guess at the name of a possible accuser certainly would give the idea that you were prepared for some such accusation."

Agnes rose up wearily. Of what were defense, argument, pleading? Did not High Lundie's vengeance follow her everywhere, blighting her every prospect? Had he not said to her, with a green, glittering light in those cruel eyes of his, "I will yet compel you to be my wife!"

No, he could not do that. She might starve, she might suffer for the actual necessaries of life, she might even be driven to throw herself, some of these stormy nights into the black, sullen waters of the river close, to her addition to her good and all, but she never would marry him.

This was the third situation of which his satanic schemings had deprived her. She was alone and helpless in the world, he was strong and powerful. Why was it that one human creature had power to exert such evil influence over another?

She went home, with a dull, fixed look in her eyes, and a deadly white, spot on her cheeks. What could she do n? For one was weak, and young, and slender, and perfectly beautiful, and the world was so full of loss and cruel.

Agnes Etheriege was working out the problem that many other human souls struggle through, and how do we know how many sink eternally in the strife, and never are heard of more?

The little lodging where she kept her trunk, and which she dignified by the title of home, had never before seemed so high and dismal-dismal of aspect, and when she entered the door she started back with a low cry. It was no longer dark, cold—and silent. Lights burned on the mantel, and a great fire of lightwood roared roared up the chimney, while a shrewd-faced, little old woman, brown and keen, with glittering eyes, like a human squirrel, sat spreading his hands over the blaze.

"Aye!" He looked up with a nod. "You are Agnes. I suppose? You know my name and business."

"No, sir," said Agnes half expecting to see the whole scene melt and dissolve, like the fabrication of enchantment, I do not.

"Well, I don't know how you should," said the old man. "I'm your Uncle Tolet. I've come home to live. Dundonian's a very nice climate, but it's a little shaky when one has passed eight score years. I'm going into the banking business. I want you to keep house for me. Yes, I know, you always supposed I was dead out in the wars. I let your mother think so. was a wild chap in my day, and no particular credit to any of my relatives; and when I had a decent record to show her, why, she was dead. That's all over and gone—no use crying over spilt milk. Come."

And Mr. Daniel Tolet rose up and seized a yellow sipaes umbrella, which apparently constituted his sole stock of luggage.

"Are you ready? I can have a fly at the door in five minutes.

"But, uncle—"

The old man chuckled.

"Say it again; it sounds good—uncle."

"Where are we going uncle?" asked Agnes her heart beginning to warm strangely toward this eccentric old man.

"To my agent's. He has hired a house for me somewhere and furnished it with something. I don't say it will be well enough as long as the roof doesn't leak and the cellars aren't damp."

And Agnes Etheriege, feeling as if she were in a dream, allowed herself to be led away from the cold room and the old life, and the dreary brooding shadows of the past.

Uncle Daniel Tolet loaded her with luxuries—hung her with jewels as if she had been a glittering eastern idol, and anticipated her slightest wish. Agnes had no more loneliness and penury now—yet the one thing over which she had rejoiced was the complete severing of sight, remembrance, link between her new life and her old.

High Lundie did not know where she was now. He could never track out to this haven of peace. He had had at last provided for this poor, little storm beaten.

Yet, whilst she had a sort of shuddering horror of him still. Once when he passed within a few feet of her carriage window as she sat opposite a Regent street shop, waiting for her uncle, she sank back, white and trembling, among the warm cushions, as if the shadow or some evil spirit's wing had fallen across her.

"Is it wicked," she asked herself, "to hate him?"

And once as she sat, all tired, and silks and jewels lay in modest patient coffins at the bank, she saw the face pass the little curtained window.

"Uncle," she faltered, "what is that?"

"I don't know what you mean, child," said the little brown-winged squirrel.

"The man with the lime necktie and the reddish mustache—there, just beyond the dome."

"A new clerk, I believe," said Uncle Tolet. Endowed gentleman—shaky wife—necessitous circumstances—all that sort of trash. Name of Lundie. Now, my dear, I await your commands."

And as Agnes Etheriege passed out of the bank, closely veiled and leaning on her uncle's arm, High Lundie never knew whose eyes the eyes fixed mournfully upon him.

"I will try to forgive him," she thought, "that I never want to speak to him or hear his voice again."

It was New Year's Eve—a dark, dismal night of snow and tempest. Miss Etheriege was sitting alone in her pretty boudoir, when a card was brought her.

Mrs. High Lundie."

She could hardly decide what course would be best for her to adopt, when the rustling of silken skirts wafted up the threshold, and a pale, pretty young little lady stood before her.

"You are Mr. Tolet's daughter?" asked the stranger, in sadly appealing accents.

"You are mistaken," Agnes answered, her heart at once softening towards this sad, shadowy creature. "Not his daughter; but his niece."

"It is all the same," Mrs. Lundie exclaimed hurriedly. "It—we have come to ask a favor of you. Your face is kind and gentle—I have faith to believe that you will grant it."

And without waiting for Miss Etheriege's reply, she tell out of a long series stories which may be too often strange in hand clerks and employees in a rule of misplaced trust and betrayed confidence of money cheefully borrowed from the hands of the bank to meet pressing exigencies in the cool certainty that fortunate speculations would enable it to be paid—all false, disgrace, impending ofemised and arrest.

And the story, told by the wifes lips was of a husband's dishonesty and defalcation.

As the poor young creature continued her sorrowful tale she threw open the door.

"Your influence over your uncle is said to be unbounded," she added, "Oh, surely, surely, you will use it for our sakes! Dear High—come yourself and plead for what is dearer and more precious to you than life—your honor—your good name among men!"

And before Agnes could speak to express she was face to face with High Lundie, the persecutor of her former years, the humble supplicant for her influence now!

In the same instant he saw and recognized her. A crimson spot mounted to his cheeks—he grew pale as death.

"Agnes Etheriege."

Oh Etheriege, with a face sweet and serene as a pictured saint, turned to his wife.

"Your favor is granted. Leave me now."

For old Daniel Tolet never refused sagit to his nieces—and Agnes Etheriege felt that she was more than avenged the moment when High Lundie's wife, as ignorant of the past as she was hopeful of the future, come with happy tears to thank her for the mercy that had been extended to her erring husband!

Pompeii of England.

A Bolton Pompeii has just been discovered near Reading in Berkshire on the great Stratefieldsy estate of the duke of Wellington, says a London dispatch of the Indianapolis Company. It is a true city, not a mere camp, and was fully excavated will three eighths of the ground. Some of our remote ancestors of more than one thousand years ago, lived in it, and now stands bare to the Brite-Roman Sun-beam. The whole area has been free from all building operations ever since the Roman occupation of Britain, in fact the oil is virgin, having been pasture land for centuries. The excavation committee has already succeeded in revealing to the universe the entire eyes life in a British city that had a Roman occupation. The work of history is almost silent. The task of excavation is a tremendous one, but the work is being prosecuted as fundamental.

An exhibition will be opened at the Burlington House Friendly, within a few days which will present features of extraordinary interest. On the walls will be hung a large plan of the buried city, showing a foreshadow the streets, walls, gates houses, bathtempes, forum and basilica stand. The excavations have brought to view the remains of an imperial house ornamented with mosaic floors and costly tinting rooms heated by hypocaustus. Among the articles to be exhibited are potsherds, bones, combs, bronze utensils, fragments of glass vessels, pieces of ironwork, elderly tools, implements, ornaments, pins, clasps, stakes, hammers, gouges, awls, and some edged tools, sharp enough, even after being buried for ten centuries to work with now. The city was laid out with great regularity in squares like Salisbury and Winchester in medieval times.

Strange feelings are excited by the sight of a piece of the upper which a lady must have trodden while the clay of which it is formed lay lying in the brick-maker's yard. Even pieces of the little now are distinct, and the entire foot is perfect; indeed, Thomas the planter came along and accosted the new hand.

"Did you see a punch go down the road a while ago?"

"Indeed I did, boss. One of the horses was a gray bone, and the other was a sorrel and limed to be off legs."

"Well, I thought I heard some one say there on the edge of the woods."

"Yes, boss, I saw the ole dem was Gal. Jones. He was by the tree. The second one was Major Peters and the third one was Tom Meekes. Ole Jones had his arms down his long-tangled breeches pockets, jingle his dimes."

"Did you see those pigeons fly over your yon?"

"Sew, sew! Guess I did! Dat was pigeons on one, sho! Dat ole Jones did good shoots jumbo."

"Well, you seem to much for a man that is blind by the day. Here's your wages. Mind, I want a man to be watch of what is going on I'll send for you."—Bellman Herald.

How Mail Cars are Missured.

Nearly every railroad in the United States carries at least once a day, one or more mail cars, whose function it is to receive, sort, and deliver the mail entrusted to the towns along or near their road.

If there is little work to do, one man does it alone, in a small room built in a part of the baggage-car or smoking-car. At the business increases, two or more men work together, having a whole car for their accommodation. This car is drawn directly behind the engine, so that there shall be no occasion for any passing through it. With still more business, between the large cities, two or more cars are run; until between New York and Chicago we have a whole train run exclusively for mail service, made up of five cars and worked by twenty men. In such a train there are two car cities, used in this way, for sorting the mail. In one car, R. F. D. is, "Rural Free-Office," and there is an immense number of such in the country, taking their names from the chief offices on the line.

Such are the Boston and Albany,—"Boston, Springfield, and New York," "Portland and Ogdensburg," "Chicago and Cedar Rapids," and many hundred others. These cars are usually 60 feet in length, ranging from twenty miles to as high as a thousand miles. The extremely long runs with the exception of the "Short Line" between Chicago and Council only in the West, where there are great distances between towns. On such a run there will be two or more men, one working along with the other works. The "New York and Chicago" is divided into three sections. On this run, the twenty men who sort and run from New York are relieved by as many more at Syracuse, and these in turn are relieved at Chicago by another set, who continue on into the train into Chicago. As a general thing, however, a run is planned in advance, and the distance which can be covered in a day.

On all the more important lines there are two sets of men, one for day, one for night service. If the run is a short one, it is but little time, one man does the work alone, running every day, and usually having several hours rest at one end of the road or the other. Where the run is long enough, so that the trip takes all day, there will be four sets of men, two on one set of men, starts at one end of the run, and returns the entire line, meeting the other somewhere on the route, and returning the next day. When these men have worked a week, they go home to rest a week, and others take their places. Such is the arduous nature of the work, that it tends to mind and body, and particularly to eyesight, from working all day long in the constant jar and motion of a car. No man would be able to retain a place were it not for these periods of rest.—Mac Bennett, in St. Nicholas.

A Bank on Wheels.

New Zealand has a bank on wheels. On certain days of the week it goes from one of the Palmerston banks travels up and down the railway line from Palmerston to Otaki transacting the ordinary business of a trip bank on route. Ladies with a satchel containing his copies of cash, and provided with a teller's usual precautions agreed to accept of checks. He makes the rounds his headquarters and there receives visits from customers at the way stations, changing checks or taking deposits as occasion may require. This plan is said to bring a good share of grist to the bank's mill, and proves a great convenience to settlers, who are saved all the trouble of journeying to towns to relieve themselves of surplus money or procure change. This will probably continue until some bold rascal borrows the clerk and claims on his bank.

People eat 20 per cent more bread when the weather is cold than when it is mild.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY,

Unexcelled in Fertility! A Wealth of Timber! One Hundred Miles of Navigable Coast-Line!

CHARLEVOIX, as the entrepot and outlet of a region bordering 90 miles of navigable inland coast, possesses elements of commercial importance that only require railroad connection to make business center of Northern Michigan. A railroad is assured! Study the map of Charlevoix county, and the relation it bears to Charlevoix harbor. Railroad connection with our lines of water traffic at this point, means concentration and enlargement of trade, transfer of travel and shipping, lines of northshore and inland steamers, and investment in manufactures. The map says so!

Eight Policemen in Nebraska Station Ambushed by Striking Employes—Six New Orleans Armed Men—Charged with Breaking Into Their Property.

RIOTERS SHOT DOWN.

Coke Strikers Attempt to Raid the Deputies at Morgstown—Five Killed.

The strikers in the coke district, disembodied in two bloody riots, in which five hundred of them were shot down and fifty or more wounded.

The strikers in the region proper acted about midnight, and after spending some time in drinking and talking for the company's stables at Kenwood respecting their action, it was determined that the deputies' quarters, and also those in the company's stables, should be fired upon by the men who had been getting drunk. A volley from the men was precipitated, by which three score shots were fired, and at least twenty-five wounded, many of whom were hit in the legs. The deputies, who had been ordered home, and who were having two of the cases in custody, one of whom was wounded in the leg, they surrounded in jail. The wages of the killed so far as known are: Jack Jones, shot through the breast; Paul Dalmadelle, killed instantly; Jack Jones, Jack Jones, Jr., John Jones, Dan Jones, John Jones, cooker; Jesse Jones, Jones, All were Poles, save one Jones, who was an Italian. Shortly before only two were known to have been killed, three were mutilated. The names of the wounded men could not be learned, as they had gone home. Two were shot in Washington, Tenth, of Washington and the Uniontown, of Finnigan's on the outside bound only and to proceed at once to the scene of the uproar, with the Sixth Regiment, the Bellaghan Hose Hose show a disposition to resist, and from them they will be also shot down.

TRACK TALK

The C. & W. M. Map Approved.—Developments at Petoskey.

The Railroad Crossing board has approved the map of the Chicago and West Michigan north from Traverse City. All objections of the parties at Bay View have been overcome by the consent of the G. R. & I. for occupancy of their right of way at Bay View and upon which to lay the track of the C. & W. M. There is no objection to the map at Charlevoix.

Petoskey Record: While it has been known for some time past that the building of the Chicago & West Michigan railroad northward from Traverse City to the straits of Mackinaw was a certainty, it was not known just where the extension would stop this year, although conservative opinion fixed the present terminus at Charlevoix. The developments of last week and this, however, set that question wholly at rest. the road will be built from Traverse City to Petoskey this year and be continued to the straits at some time in the near future. At a conference between General Manager Heald and Attorney Wm. Alden Smith and the business men of Petoskey on Friday night the officials stated that within forty-eight hours after they were tendered the right of way from the west line of Emmet county to the corporate limits of Bay View, together with depot grounds within the village, they would set a force of men at work at this end of the line. They also secured through H. A. Rollins a rate for the delivery on the Petoskey dock of 2,000 tons of steel rail. At the Friday night meeting Captain H. O. Rose donated the right of way along the whole of his water front, extending from Bay View to the west side of Bear Lake a distance of one mile, and the business men pledged themselves to meet the moderate demands of the company within ten days time. Most of the property owners between Bear Creek and the west line of the county, which is seven miles from Petoskey and one mile west of Carpenter postoffice, have signified their willingness to give the right of way, and deeds and contracts are being rapidly made out this week. There will be but few cases wherein hardship is involved or where there will be any difficulty in compromising conflicting interests, and the energetic committee confidently expect to run over the right of way to the company next week. If they do, before May 1 dirt will fly all along the line between here and Charlevoix and before September cars will be running between the two places. There will be a meeting of the general committee and property owners this afternoon at 4 in the council chamber, where it is hoped an understanding will be arrived at by which the line can be carried from Bear Creek to the west boundary of the corporation.

A piece of good news to Petoskey as well as to Bay View, is the information that arrangements have been made between the G. R. & I. and the C. & W. M. by which the latter will lay its tracks along side of the G. R. & I. Rails, on this company's right of way from Petoskey to Bay View. It is probable that the new road will join the old at Rose's siding.

Late Events.

Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

Leslie Giddings goes in the City of Grand Rapids.

The tug Higgie received a new wheel by steamer Lawrence Wednesday.

The schooner Florence M. Smith left for Milwaukee yesterday with a load of posts.

The schooner yacht "Kate Graham," of Toledo, will sail upon Little Traverse bay this summer.

The schooner Fleetwing left for Milwaukee Saturday, with a load of posts. The first cargo out this season.

The fish tugs Anspach, Clara Belle, Parmelee, Minnie Warren and Endress set their nets Friday Morning.

The schooner Seaman, of Sheboygan arrived Monday, and is loading lumber at Nicholls, Lewis & Bates dock.

Capt. Young writes the Traverse Bay Eagle from Grand Haven that the steamer Crescent will commence her regular trips on Monday, April 13th, wind, weather and ice permitting.

The Lawrence arrived here last night at six o'clock, bringing a large cargo of freight for our business men. The Petoskey is now in the bay on her way north and is expected here to-day.

The City of Marquette left Saturday for Manitowoc. She will make two trips between that place and Northport, before leaving for the north, where she will run between Sault Ste. Marie and Marquette the coming season.

The "Virginia," the new steamer built for the Goodrich line for the west coast, some time perhaps to be transferred to this side, is modeled after the trans-Atlantic ocean steamers, with turtle decks forward, and all the accessories of salt water travel.

A telegram from Mackinac City says of the straits: "The weather is cold and ice that was very soft one week ago is now quite solid again. There is considerable open water between here and St. Helena but not until the weather becomes decidedly warmer can a definite idea be formed as to the probable length of time before the straits can open."

The following changes in the lightship service are announced: Wm. Shield, second assistant at Skilligallee, will be transferred as assistant keeper at Beaver Head (new position.) Joseph Fountain, keeper at South Fox Island, will be transferred to Beaver Island Harbor, vice John C. Gallagher, resigned. Lewis Bourisan, assistant, succeeds Mr. Fountain as keeper of South Fox Island. Thomas J. Armstrong, second assistant at South Manitou, succeeds Mr. Young at Pilot Island.

FOR SALE—Good team of horses cheap. Inquire of ISAAC MILLER.

—The Board of School Inspectors request that all persons having library books in their possession return them at once. No books will be issued this week on account of annual inventory to be taken next Monday.

CHARLEVOIX HARBOR

A Government Dredge to be Here Soon.

The following letter from Engineer Wm. Lindlow to President Bultas, explains itself.

ENGINEER'S OFFICE, MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 7, 1891.

HON. A. BUTTAS,
President Charlevoix, Mich.

Sir: I have your letter of April 3, in reference to the shallowness of the channel between Lake Michigan and Round Lake, Charlevoix, accompanied by a diagram showing the depth of water between the piers. I am obliged to you for the information which your letter gives. Ordinarily, communications of this kind convey simply a complaint of the navigation without any data from which to judge of the actual condition of affairs. I have already had a letter from Charlevoix sent me by Mr. H. S. Harsha, in behalf of the City Council, and have directed immediate investigation to be made of the condition of both channels, outer and inner.

A dredge has recently been purchased at Saginaw, and as soon as the navigation is in such condition as to enable me to get it around, it will be brought through the straits of Mackinac, with orders to stop at Charlevoix and do what is necessary to relieve the navigation at that point without delay. I am now awaiting information from the Straits of Mackinac as to the probable date at which transit of the Straits can be made. The matter will receive the earliest attention practicable. Respectfully,

WILLIAM LINDLOW
Engineer U. S. A.

From the above it is safe to infer that the dredge will be at work here within ten days or two weeks.

Harbor Springs Cor. Petoskey Inquirer: From present indications boats can get into the harbor between the 15th and 20th.

John Sands, of Suttons Bay, found his team of horses nearly dead in a swamp on Sunday last, where some scamp had driven them.

It will take 100,000 barrels of cement to build the canal lock at the Soo. The masonry contract is said to be the largest ever let in this country.

Bellaire Herald: J. W. Matherson has bought of Owen Schoolcraft the stock of furniture and undertaking goods formerly owned by the Deable Furniture Co.

Northport Cor. Grand Traverse Herald: F. M. Goodrich, of Chicago, has purchased the place owned by Ed. Miller. He contemplates putting up cottages and letting them to tourists the coming season.

Both wheat and potatoes have reached the $ mark in Traverse City to-day. Pasties are being brought in by the thousands of bushels. We know one man who is delivering 1,200 bushels from his own place.

Elk Rapids Progress: The warehouse on the dock caught fire Tuesday evening about 6 o'clock but was got out before much damage was done, a hole in the roof burned. Fire supposed to have caught from the pipe driver engine.

Recently a notice was sent to an advertising journal that Eastport would be a good location for a doctor and that parties wishing to locate could correspond with Daniel Blakely. There have been thirty-three applications received within two weeks.

Grand Traverse Herald: Six fishermen were carried out into Lake Michigan upon the ice on Wednesday and were upon the floe five hours before being rescued.

Col. Marquette, of Cheboygan, with two comrades interviewed six gray wolves on the ice on Black Lake last week. They won no glory, but got away, no shouldering their axes and starting for them, the wolves retired to the forest.

East Jordan Enterprise: Ira H. Moonehouse, who for the past winter has been an inmate of the soldiers' National Home at Milwaukee, has returned. He soon starts for New York where he will bask in the society of old friends and relatives for a season and then return to this place.

Cadillac News: Cadillac is to have another corset factory, and plenty of painful preparations for midsummer nights' music is now in progress.——John Rankey, a young married man in the employ of Clubenden & Herrick, had both his legs broken last week, while hauling logs.——The editor of the Kalkaskian, who is also a landed proprietor, offers to sell town lots in Kalkaska for eight dollars and forty cents each.

Cadillac News: The state schoolmaster's club held in Cadillac last week, was largely attended by teachers from northern Michigan. The following officers were elected for the remainder of the year: G. E. Catton, president; S. W. Balkie, vice president, C. T. Grawn, secretary and treasurer. The executive committee consists of the above named officers and H. M. Enos and Miss Ella Morrell. The next meeting will be held the Friday following Thanksgiving.

POISONED! $50.00 REWARD

We print the picture of Fireman H. L. Stroming of engine Co. No. 18, situated at 436 W. 12th St., Chicago, Ill. Mr. Stroming had been suffering for several years from Kidney and Liver Complaints, which finally poisoned his blood with Rheumatism. The following is Mr. Stroming's own statement of his Terrible Suffering. "During the time of the big Chicago fire I was taken down with a severe cold. My Liver and Kidneys commenced giving a great deal of trouble and finally poisoned my blood with rheumatism. The pains in my back were so terrible that I can not describe them. At every quick attempt to rise from a sitting position the pain would become so severe that it would almost take my breath away. During the many years of my suffering I did not know what it was to get a good night's sleep, and when I did sleep it was due to sheer exhaustion. I tried physicians and medicines, but they could not even give me relief. I commenced using Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic Cure after I had lost all faith in everything. I had used this medicine only a few days when my pain was all gone and before I had used three bottles of it I was entirely well. I am feeling better now than I have felt in many years. My kidneys give me no more bother. In fact, I feel stronger and more vigorous than ever before. Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic cure is a long felt want. I have some induced many of my friends to use this truly great medicine and it has done wonderful work in every case. Anyone doubting the truth of this statement, can see me any day at the engine house. It will always afford me great pleasure to say a good word for Abbott Bros.' remedy." $50.00 Reward for any case of Rheumatism or Neuralgia we can not cure. Sold only by F. G. HINES & CO., Charlevoix, Mich., who can furnish local testimonials.

—A good many strangers are within our gates, and the number will be increased as railroad building progresses.

—H. S. Way has the lumber on the ground and will commence work on the Mt. McSauba observatory tomorrow.

—H. H. Lobdell, father of Sam Lobdell, of this place, has sold his Holly property, and will remove to Charlevoix.

—Gov. Winans has appointed April 30 as Arbor Day, and earnestly requests everybody to turn out and spend a part of the day planting trees.

—Legrand Lamphear, last week received a letter announcing the death of an aunt in Connecticut, and enclosing a check for $1,000 as his share of the estate.

—Sherwood, the enterprising boot and shoe man, has just received an elegant line of new goods, to which he calls your attention in his advertising space.

—Rev. C. F. Van Anden telegraphs that the grippe prevents his keeping his Charlevoix appointment as announced. There will be no meeting this evening.

—Capt. James and Joseph Beaudoin desire us to convey their thanks to all those who so promptly and kindly tendered their sympathy in their recent bereavement.

—There will be a box social at Hayward next Friday evening, April 24th. A short entertainment will be given and good time is expected. Admission 50 cents per box.

—John Shapton, sr., of Marion, sowed three acres of wheat Monday. He says the ground is in fine clean condition. This is about the first seeding of the season, in this neighborhood.

—A San Louis Obispo (Cal.) paper announces the death of Mrs. Eleanor Sloan (ex), aged 63 years. Mrs. Cox was an early settler of Antrim City, Antrim county, and well known to all old residents of that locality.

—During the past week the woods have been full of railroad contractors looking over the line of the C. & W. M. extension. It is expected that before the month closes active operations will be begun all along the line.

—There is no railroad news of especial interest this week. Matters are "between hay and grass." Contracts were to have been let last Monday. Probably, in our next issue we may be able to make important announcements.

—Perhaps some of our readers, in noting the shortcomings of the Sentinel this week, will appreciate the difficulty of picking up the run of events after an absence of two weeks. We shall endeavor to make up the deficiency in future issues.

—The new front to the Cohen building, occupied by Mason & Berdan, is completed, and is in the hands of the painters. The upper section is of variegated glass, and the main front is lighted by first-class heavy plate glass. The building is very much improved by the change.

—A branch of the Michigan Savings and Loan Association was organized in Charlevoix last week, with Dr. LeFevre as President; Frank Sears, Secretary; S. H. Calkins, Treasurer; E. H. Gaunt, Attorney; H. Berdan, W. H. Vaughn and J. P. Partridge, Advisory Board.

—The annual meeting of the C. & W. M. stockholders was held the 15th in Muskegon. The following directors were elected: H. H. Hunnewell, G. O. Shattuck, F. H. Dumon, Chas. Merriam, C. P. Adams, Everett Thayer and H. Harver, of Boston, and C. M. Heald, of Grand Rapids. The action of the retiring board in conferring with the Chicago & North Michigan Railway company for the construction and operation of the extension to Petoskey was approved.

—The death of Rev. J. T. Iddings at Albion last week, is a personal bereavement to many a Charlevoix household. Mr. Iddings was the pastor of the Charlevoix M. E. church for three years, and in the history of this charge no pastor has embodied more of the elements of sterling Christian character than Mr. Iddings. The loss comes heavily not only upon the family but upon the two conferences, in both of which he was well known and respected, as a zealous and intelligent pastor, and a true type of the Christian gentleman—which is always the highest type.

—On Sunday afternoon at five o'clock a gentleman passing through the lumber yard of Nicholls, Lewis & Bates, found the dead body of James Jenkins, lying under the tramway. He was lying in a natural position, and from appearances seemed to have died suddenly of heart failure. Mr. Jenkins was 74 years of age. He was born in lower Canada, and was a typical old-style Canadian French gentleman. Few men have had a more checkered history than James Beauvais. Fifty years ago he was one of the hunters and trappers of the Hudson Bay Fur Company, and for many years traversed the great Northwestern wilderness about Hudson Bay and lake Superior, and could tell many stories of "hair-breath escapes" in the land of the caribou and moose. He was the father of Capt. James Beauvais, Joseph Beauvais, of this place, and Earnest Beauvais, of Washington State. His funeral occurred yesterday at 10 a. m., from the residence of his son Joseph.

Death of Rev. J. T. Iddings.

Rev. Joseph T. Iddings has passed away to dwell among "the higher intelligences" on Sunday evening, April 12th, just at sunset, while evening bells were calling "come to the house of God." His death, as his life, was gentle, joyous and full of peace beyond all understanding. A little look of wonder, a rapturous smile, a soft sigh and eternity was his. The funeral services were held at the M. E. church on Wednesday afternoon, April 15. His Presiding Elder, Rev. N. L. Bray, presided, assisted by President Fiske, Rev. Washington Gardner, Rev. I. R. A. Wightman, Rev. James Hamilton, of Coldwater, Rev. Dr. Cullen, of Jackson, and Rev. A. A. Knapp'en. Many others of the brethren of the ministerial brethren were present. The hymns of the church were sung above him. More sweetly they sounded than they were sounded before. The gospel was read, words of profoundest respect and affection were spoken, and then "the precious dust" was borne to its last repose at Riverside. He sleeps in friendly company, near Dr. Jocelyn, Dr. Perrine, and Rev. Mr. Hoag. "And now he is released, the brave soul sees his King and joins the ransomed."—Albion Recorder.

BURGLARS LED BY AN ATTORNEY.

An Indianapolis Lawyer Charged with Being the Head of a Gang of Burglars.

LYNON (Ind.) HERALD, a reputable and attorney at Indianapolis, was arrested and charged with burglary as a habitual guest connected to the gangs. During the last month there have been many robbers during burglaries and the police have been trying to get the guilty parties. Last week several of them were arrested and one of them has confessed to the grand jury all and all the game. The indictment furnished as the name of three men and the grand jury has directed all the officers. Several weeks ago Lynnville had a burglary outside, and an account in a local paper mentioning the burglary. The article suggested that that let had the gang at Lynnville to rob the house and the other "job" was. According to the confession Lynnville and Lynnville the gang had planned many of the time the effort was made, but he, of course, was not with them. Lynnville, the attorney, is a prominent man in the city, and was frightened at the time he left the city. He was in Indianapolis, and he was arrested in a local paper mentioning the burglary outside, and the

BURGLARS LED BY AN ATTORNEY.

An Indianapolis Lawyer Charged with Being the Head of a Gang of Burglars.

LENOX (Ind.) Revenue is exceptionable and attorney at Indianapolis was recently charged with burglary on an indictment secured in the grand jury. During for last month there have been numerous burglaries here, and the police have been trying to get the assassinators. Last week seven of them were arrested and one of them has confessed to the great mystery of the gang. He implicated Hackleton as the leader of it and says that the latter has directed all the robberies. Several weeks ago Hackleton left the city suddenly, and an account to a local paper regarding his individual conduct was suggested him that he had the gang arrested in his absence. Hackleton is a bachelor. According to the confession Hackleton has been in the habit of buying watches at the time the robbery was being by the gang, and after the crime was committed he would go to the families to sell the watches to the families in their locality. Hackleton has been located and has been arrested.

BOYS CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Their Connection with a Parents' Death Must Be Further Inquired.

NEAR MOUNT VERNON, Ind., Frank Hilles, Edward Stone, Jay Hart and Harry Dorlman, three boys were arrested for murdering the wife of Hilles, the father of Frank Hilles, a farmer near Mount Vernon. It is said the boy had been suspected of the murder, the evidence against them, Mrs. Hilles, a farmer was found lying in her room with her head almost cut off and nearly frozen. Both the boys were arrested and confessed. They said they intended to rob the house, but it was to be done without killing the woman, but she had recognized them and they had killed her. The boys were frightened at what had happened and left the house.

GOTHAM'S DEATH RECORD.

One of Every Twelve and a Eighteen are Caused by the Grip.

THE HOG IN THE ORIENT.

Eastern Nations Dread Its Touch but Western Scientists Eat It.

Millions of men loathe the hog and dread its touch. Jews, Mohammedans and Hindoos agree with each other in their detestation of "the unclean one." A party of Europeans, traveling in the East, were much amused at meal times by the natives swarming round their like flies. At last, one cunning man suggested that a piece of bacon might drive them away. It was produced, and as soon as the natives saw it, they fled. A mounted English officer of high rank, ignorant of the Hindoos' prejudice against the hog, took up the little son of a Hindoo noble, and placed the boy before him on his saddle. The saddle was made of pig-skin, and the child's caste was at once broken. He had touched the unclean hog, and not until he had gone through a long and expensive series of purifications in a cowshed was he received among his own people.

The capital of an East Indiaman once used a pig to compel the crew to do their duty. The ship was largely manned by Hindoo sailors, who, as long as the vessel was in the warm latitudes cheerfully did their work. When, however, the higher latitudes were reached, the men suffered from the cold and began to think their duty. At last, they refused to come on deck, and, in spite of persuasion, some hours remained below in the forecastle. A happy thought struck the captain; he ordered a rope tied to the leg of the ship's pig and had the animal lowered into the sailors' quarters. Immediately every Hindoo fearing his caste might be broken, rushed on deck to avoid contact with the contaminated beast.

But what is one man's poison is another man's food. Jews, Mohammedans and Hindoos agree in the hog for its unclean qualities. Rev. J. G. Wood, value as food. Yet the introduction of the pig into New Zealand and Fiji has astonished the flesh of the hog for first of men, and that the natives of Hawaii and Fiji have the greatest admiration for piglings, which they carry about as if they were kittens. One day a traveler in the Sandwich Islands met a group of women sitting under the shade of a tree, grouped around a large hog. They were driving the hog to market, and proceeding to cool themselves, as to defray the animal in the best condition. The hog was lying on its side, and the women had removed their garments, stripped them in a brook, laid them on the pig, and were busily engaged in fanning it. Doubtless that pig made better pork than the hogs which are sharpened after days of travel in railroad cars.

She Drank Not Water.

The saddest remains of Mrs. Katie Stuff, the oldest resident of this community, were consigned to their last resting place, says a dispatch from Greensburg, Pa. Mrs. Stuff, who was familiarly called "Aunt Katie" by all who knew her, was a remarkable woman in many respects. She was 98 years of age at the time of her death, and up to within a few days before the beginning of that event had had her health to a marked degree, she was a little girl. Aunt Katie insisted that water doesn't weaken, and drank tea and coffee only.

Fishing used to be one of her pleasures. Getting up early in the morning in summer time, she would fill the pocket of her dress with grasshoppers, pin it up to keep them secure, and then, rod in hand, she would repair to the banks of the Conemaugh River, after putting the local fishermen to the blush by her skill. For the past ten years it was a source of great pride to her to visit the harvest field each summer and bind a sheaf of grain, which was always faithfully revealed by the local gross, affording her the highest gratification. Last summer, however, old age triumphed, and "Aunt Katie," to her great distress, was compelled to break her record for the first time.

"I will never die," she used to say, year promptly. "I will just dry up and blow away. See if I don't." And she almost kept her word. At the time of her death it would not have taken much of a gale to have wafted her away on its pinions. Mrs. Stuff was born in Green Village, Franklin county, and while still in her teens married a man named Miller, and removed to this neighborhood, where she has resided ever since. After the death of her first husband, she married John Stuff, a millwright, whose relict she was at the time of her death. She was a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church for ever eighty one years. She leaves eighteen grandchildren, forty-six great-grandchildren, and two great-great grandchildren to mourn her loss.

Brave Mother.

As showing the force of maternal love among the lower animals, there are few more pathetic incidents than the following, which comes from Australia:

The owner of a country station was sitting one evening on the balcony outside the house, when he was surprised to notice a kangaroo lingering about, as though half in doubt and fear what to do. At length she approached the waterpipe, and, taking a young one from her pouch, held it to the water to drink.

While her baby was satisfying its thirst the mother was quivering all over with excitement, for she was only a few feet from the balcony, on which one of her great foes was sitting, watching her. The little one having finished drinking, it was replaced in the pouch, and the old kangaroo waited and off at a rapid pace.

When the natural timidity of the kangaroo is taken into account, it will be recognized what wonderful bravery this affectionate mother betrayed. It is a pleasing ending to the story that the operations was so affected by the scene that from that time forward he could never shoot a kangaroo.

It has been estimated that the volume of water poured into the Rio de la Plata, South America, exceeds the aggregate discharge of all the rivers of Europe just together. Its ordinary flow at some points is 100,000 cubic feet per second.

BELL'S TELEPHONE.

The Patent Expires in Two Years, When There'll be Great Improvements.

In about two years the original patents of the Bell Telephone company on the art of transmitting the human voice over wires by electricity will expire, says the St. Louis Republic. Then anybody who chooses can make and use a telephone without let or hindrance.

Desiring to learn what would probably be the result of the extinction of the Bell Telephone company's monopoly a Republic reporter sought out Leo Ehrlich, a noted inventor of St. Louis. Mr. Ehrlich was one of the first inventors of the telephone in this country, and with others contested in the Supreme court of the United States the Bell Telephone company's right to exclusive right of the invention. But the Supreme court decided against them and they were forced to abandon the use of their inventions. On learning the mission of the reporter Mr. Ehrlich said:

"Yes, the Bell Telephone company's patent on the art of transmitting the human voice over wires by electricity expires in March, '93, and then everybody can make and use a telephone. As to what the result will be I would say that as matters now stand it will affect the price of the telephone service but little. I am satisfied, however, that at the expiration of their patent the Bell Telephone company will give us a much superior telephone system to the present one, and one worth the slightest whisper, five or ten feet away from the 'piece,' will be distinctly transmitted for miles. They have been preparing against the competitors that will spring up at the expiration of their patent by purchasing at enormous figures from needy inventors all valuable improvements that have been made to the telephone, and they are now the owners of patents so superior to the present telephone as it is to the toy phone.

"From personal tests in Boston I know they have practical instruments that are 100 per cent better than those in use now in transmitting the human voice distinctly. They are keeping these inventions, on which the patents will yet run for years, in reserve and will bring them out if any attempt is made in competition. So the net result, you may say, will be better service at a slightly reduced rate. The Western Union similarly has a vast number of telegraph patents stored away for future use, should competition become more active. There will be also another result on the expiration of the patent, and that is that telephones will become very cheap, and for $5 or $2.50 any one can purchase an efficient telephone. This will have the effect to create an extensive use of them, and private telephone lines and small exchanges will become numerous. They will also generally displace speaking-tubes and push-boxes in buildings, and hotels will substitute them for speaking-tubes, so that guests can communicate their wishes to the office without the inconvenience of a bell-boy."

"As a rule, are the inventors fairly treated and protected in the United States?" asked the reporter.

"The inventor, as a rule, I think gets all he is entitled to, but not so much as he would like, for the simple reason that 999 out of 1,000 inventions are worthless. We hear a good deal about the impecunious inventor and his many hardships, but neither the law nor the public, but the poor inventions, are to blame. Take up the official gazette of the patent office and I will guarantee that not twenty-five in 100 of the patents set out in the paper they are written on. To such as an inventor, as in any other calling, a person must be content to patiently struggle along for years without success and never grow weary or lose courage at reverses. A fortune is now and then made by a happy hit of some genius, but it is a very rare and should not encourage no one to enter the field unless he has strong qualities and great industry.

"I will tell you what makes the money in this business. It is the patent-solicitor and the government. When a man gets an idea that he looks valuable he immediately rushes off and pays some solicitor a $25 fee and the government $10 for a patent, and from the hundreds of thousands of patents annually issued you can see what an enormous sum is paid solicitors and the government. I really think if all those fees made out of patents in the United States since the passage of the patent law would equal what has been paid by inventors in obtaining their patents.

"Up to date the inventors have paid the government $1,000,000 more than has been required to pay all the expenses of the patent-office department. This, I think, is wrong and should be changed to a reduction of fees to merely cover the expenses of the department."

Papa Didn't Whistle.

There was an amusing incident in one of the cars of a local train from Keys Mayer yesterday afternoon, occasioned by the peculiar antics of a 5-year-old who was being brought to the city by his father, a well-known citizen of that mountain town. The youngster insisted upon standing on the seat with his head out of the window, and was in imminent danger of losing his hat, which was a little red urban, adorned with regulation tassel.

"You'll lose your hat if you don't keep your head in," said the fond parent.

"Does not," replied the precocious youngster, as the red urban popped out of the window again.

The father's warning was of no avail. He inserted in a little piece of strategy. As the little head popped out of the window again for the tenth time, Mr. Blank took hold of the tassel, and in a dexterous movement pulled the cap under his coat.

"There," said he to the father, "I told you to keep your head in or you'd lose your hat."

The youngster began to cry, when the father gave a sharp whistle and produced the cap with the remark: "There, I've whistled for your cap to come back, and now be careful."

The child thought it was great sport, so this time he deliberately threw the urban out of the window, to the great astonishment of the father.

"Whistle, papa," persisted the child gleefully, "and send it turn back."

Papa didn't whistle, but the whole carload of passengers roared, much to his discomfiture.

The largest wave to be found are off the Cape of Good Hope, where at times there are not over half a dozen swells to the mile, but they are at all dangerous compared with those of other waters.

Some Texas Indians.

The Alabama Indians came from east of the Mississippi river over 200 years ago. They have been gradually reduced in numbers to about 250 of whom about sixty are warriors. The name of the chief is John Scott, and there are four leading, or, rather, subordinate chiefs, viz.: Billy Poncho, Washington Silas Jim, Charley Thompson and Joaquin Poncho. They have acquired but little of the habits, customs, etc., of civilization, clinging with tenacity to the savage customs of their race. Some few do not speak a lisky.

They are generally honest, truthful and industrious; they are peaceful and very grave in demeanor, yet at the same time very susceptible to mirth when they perceive things ludicrous.

A portion wear the same clothing as their white neighbors, others the garb of their forefathers. They are fond of ornaments, preparing themselves beautiful work in beads and colors. The men wear long black hair, and where they have adopted the dress of the whites wear bright-colored shirts and blankets leggings. The squaws dress in bright-colored calico, with a profusion of beads, and silver ornaments. The Alabama Indians take care of the old and helpless among them. They live in a village on Big Sandy creek on a tract of 1,280 acres of land given them by the state of Texas.

They have fields and raise corn, cotton, sweet potatoes, sugar cane and peas, and have horses, cattle, hogs and poultry. They raise sufficient grain for bread, and pick cotton and do other work for the farmers. They use sacacoolah toasters. Their houses are built of logs and slabs, and, accustomed to the open air as the Indians are, they are sufficiently comfortable. As might be expected, the Indians are superstitious and believe in witchcraft.

They are governed by their own tribal laws, which are in some instances very strict; they slay the murderer, etc. For Indians, they are a handsome and intelligent tribe; their law prohibiting marrying with the whites or colored race is strict. They are expert ball players and have the following dances: The green corn, beef, horse, frog, deer, bird, chicken, scalp and war dances, and mimic the actions of animals and birds in their dances. The Alabama Indians have been for some time instructed by the Rev. Mr. Curry and his wife. Mr. Curry is now dead, and Mrs. Curry is still teaching them, and deserves great credit for the care and attention she has given them.—Galveston News.

The Wife of the Great Showman.

In appearance she is a trifle under medium height, with a figure slightly inclined to matronly stoutness, which she carries with an evenness and poise gained from long years of physical culture. Her complexion is English in its purity and beauty, her hair dark and her eyes gray. She possesses that "that excellent thing in woman," a voice purely English in its sweetness and tone.

Mrs. Barnum's yet bobby—at least, so says her husband, longingly indulgent—is her indefatigable pursuit of tireless and most beautiful examples of her success in this pursuit, with the numerous mementoes of its master's varied career, make of "Marmina's home worth the having. It is the family home during most of the year, though a part of each winter is spent in New York for the purpose of attending the opera and theatres, of which husband and wife are equally fond, and occasional visits are paid elsewhere.

Mrs. Barnum possesses to an unusual degree a liking for society and entertaining which makes of her the most delightful of hostesses. Her dinners are models, the easy grace and cordial hospitality of their hostess adding much to their enjoyment. Herself a brilliant conversationalist, she attracts to her, people of eminence in intellect and brilliancy, and her most honored guests are apt to be either literary or musical people, as these she finds more specially congenial. For Mrs. Barnum, though modestly confessing only to a great liking for music, is a musician of some skill, and though so persistently has as yet indeed her to write over her own name, she is an able and fluent writer. She proves a most valuable and efficient aid to her husband in his numerous charities, such assistance as she renders being always given anonymously or under cover of Mr. Barnum's name.—The Boston Home Journal.

Will Cuba Break Its Yoke?

Readers of this department will remember the curious prophecy of the Tonawanda Indian, which was given entire in "Notes for the Curious," in which the startling prediction was made that Cuba would break in two and sink beneath the waves before the ending of the present century, says the St. Louis Republic. A recent letter to an eastern paper, written perhaps by some person who had never heard of the old man's effort at uncovering the future, contains, among other matters, the following:

"The startling discovery has been made that Cuba is cracking—and slowly cracking, but bursting wide open. Numerous fissures in the earth have suddenly appeared in many widely situated localities, but particularly near Matanzas. One of these enormous cracks is nearly eleven English miles in length, and has actually broken a mountain chain asunder, leaving a wide gap, which, but for the fact that the fissure occurred without bottom, would make a splendid roadway, making the city plantations in the valley beyond at least fifty miles nearer Latitude, the nearest port, which is now reached by rounding the span of the mountain. Some of the cracks are appearing within in sight of this place (Matanzas) are five to 1,000 feet long, twenty-five to fifty feet wide, and of unknown depth. These disturbances may be, and no doubt are, a continuation of those felt ages ago along the south coast of the island, but the people are not inclined to clear it in time signs, regarding all such manifestation with a superstitious awe, many of them are fully believing that some impending calamity is about to overwhelm the country. Scientists explain it by saying that the earth's crust thickens from the island, and that, therefore, the infuse pressure is forced the nearest coast line; the crust there and in the ocean beyond being thinner, is more sensitive to central disturbances."

Onions.

The onion is a prohibitive vegetable, having been sent from India to Palestine, as its nameis in Sanscrit and Hebrew verity. It was once, as far back as can be traced, by the Greeks. Romans, and Egyptians. It is found in a wild state to-day in many parts of Asia.

INDIAN SIGN LANGUAGE.

How They Talk with Their Hands—The Meaning of Various Signals.

All Indians are able to understand each other and to converse by means of their sign-language. The signs differ materially among different tribes, but are all significant as to permit of no doubt as to their meaning. The sign-language is the easiest of all languages to learn, as almost ever gesture is a familiar upon present.

Suppose an Indian and a white man, riding together on the prairie, raised another Indian. The latter is suspicious. He raises his hand, palm outwards. This means "stop." He then points to the white man. The other Indian no hesitatds him to mean that he is suspicious of his companion.

Pointing with the right forefinger several times horizontally, "Where are?" If a Crow, the Indians raises both his hands to the sky and flaps them like wings. If a Blackfoot he raises his hand and strokes the side. If a Sioux, he draws his hand across his throat.

Pointing forward to the white man the Indian is understood to ask: "Who is he?" The tipee is shown by making the two fore fingers upright, indicates the stranger that he is a friend. Suppose he pass each forefinger and the forefinger and points to the white man and then to himself, he means that the white man is a very dear friend or a brother. This sign signifies that they have sworn the same mother.

Now, suppose the Indian wishes to indicate to the one who is the companion of the white man what he knows differently and employs the latter to be a big man. He makes his right hand in a level with his right ear, extends the fingers and shows the palm of the hand in a straight line across his chest from the right to the left shoulder. "Your last statement is not true." If he is thirsty he points upward, and scattering his fingers he means, "He is a liar and a coward."

A brave man would be indicated among the Sioux by otherhing the dot and scattering the fingers.

The sign-for death are graphic. If he is shot the Indian would raise his forefinger and drop it back downback, bent, frog, deer, bird, chicken, scalp and war dances, and mimic the actions of animals and birds in their dances. The Alabama Indians have been for some time instructed by the Rev. Mr. Curry and his wife. Mr. Curry is now dead, and Mrs. Curry is still teaching them, and deserves great credit for the care and attention she has given them.—Galveston News.

TWO DOROTHYS.

BY MARGARET JOHNSON.

A LITTLE maid with cheeks red as a rose
And locks black as night
Sat in her mother's lap
Clad in her nightdress dainty and white,
Lisping her evening prayer
Ere she should go to sleep
Her mother listening the while
Her little heart to keep.

A little maid, in breathless hush,
With shining cheeks and tangled hair,
Sat on the stair and drew the story
And wept for sympathy, dreaming deep
Of Dorothy, who had no mother
To listen, soft-voiced, her childish prayer.

A saucy maid, with curls yellow
As the ripe grain when autumn comes mellow,
Stole to the library but said—laughing tongue,
And blue eyes twinkling—"I'm not afraid
Of ghosts, whatever others may be."

The mischief-maid stole even closer still
Then on the skirts of Mrs. Grundy,
Who, shocked at such a speech from a maiden
Of her position, called a spanker.
Then frowning, said Dorothy:

"Child, you are naughty!"

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER II.

IN ANNUAL DISCUSSION AND HEAD BUSINESS.

Dan Hale stood looking at Chub. He had seen Chub many times. Words seemed too weak to describe Chub's unusualness. Formally, he addressed his wife.

"Mary Hale, sir."

"Pete Jakes, Hale, Hale and Grundy."

"Mary, this is Chub. I can't stop to talk—I know to-day you have saved my life."

"I reckon I've saved more'n one life, sir."

"Yes, sir."

"Just as sure as anything."

"And I laugh. If you'd seen Dan jump. The last jump he ever will jump. They stuffed wadding, and pasted and painted, so you couldn't tell yourself it wasn't as well take the risk."

"Mr. Dawson—Chub—I'm glad I'm Dan Hale, glad to be caught by hand, tooth and nail, by a man and a woman in millinery!"

"Nonsense, Dan! I'm begin to say nicer things to me soon."

"They are not half nice enough—Chub have been attached to you from the moment I first saw you."

"I reckon it's about time for me to go home."

"No. You must hear—Chub—you saved. I can't let you go—it might kill me to go—until I speak what is to my mind. If you think you could ever care for me, Dan Grundy—see from speaking."

"Mr. Dawson—you're jesting. Dan's dead—Dan Caughlan, and Dan Hale thought so, too, and he ought to know, or more slowly laugh—"You're doing all the talking. Now, I'm a decent old girl, as everybody knows."

He glared at her alternately. Shah was a square out girl. Her blue eyes met his with a frank, fearless look. They were going to be partners in her time, in the time she had left, in the time she had left, in the time.

"I'm a square outgirl, Dan Hale. If you want to come to my home, and father dies, you'll be the boss, and you. My father is a man who has been lost in the world sense. I don't know, but things colors dim across and dim and gone—I was one about things to be a square girl. That's the way the thing flows in the mountains. I don't suppose you see as far as the folks you've lived among—but we're straight out—all except that gang of Meadows who make them camp up in the mark, the, one, in a while. Yes, sir, sir."

Dan Hale took off his hat and bowed as low as continuously as though she were a queen.

"I wish I could say for the people you refer to that they had the thousandth part of the humanity, the humanity part of the good qualities you and father possess."

"Well, this is not the place to be stopping to pass such high compliments. That's what you want, I reckon."

"I'll go home."

Dan Hale turned, waved his hand, as he walked off.

The Meeks and Squiffy had turned up in a body, and had seen remarkable things. They were in a state of molestation from that source for the rest of the day.

But Chub, and Dan after he had left her, watching the sun, and the shadows of the mountains side in the opposite direction.

Dan Hale pushed on quickly to Boyne Meeks', where he found the two Dreadnaughts, and the Widow Dorset.

They were both full of news.

Chub was late for supper in the Meeks. He had jumped further and higher than any man who had stood before him. He could—but, more than once—jumped off the ground, clinched one man's ears the size of a pumpkin, and the most instant clinched antagonist. To hear a man hit off was as easy as breathing to Si Sloan.

The other man was the best wrestler in the county. If Perkins had held every hold in his back that he had the security to hold him. He did not care how his opponent fell, so he fell, and he fell on top. If Sloan had fallen, it was all one to Hill. Perkins was a man who would have walked indoors down the stairs, if he engaged a free fight. If he was as soon as possible, and he was that if Perkins fell, comes in such short order the man who fetched him down in the house he was not a fool hand at boxing, either. He could hold almost any man in the county with his naro hold, but, with feet and fists all unchained, no man could be found to that part of the State to try conclusions with Hi Perkins.

When, Dan Hale appeared on the ground the round were standing at some wrestling match by a jolly lookout man who remarked—Sandifer's Jim, I think, was stomped strongly on sundays any time a fellow had gotten up a ring, and sing hymns that indicated extraordinary strength.

When Dan entered the round, a good many knew that he had been down, and stared at him curiously. He felt some that amazed at first, but he addressed the man nearest him politely, and in a low tone said:

"If you please inform me which is Mr. Sloan's opponent."

"Si Sloan, Si Sloan—yonder. Went down—I saw you be—nice enough to tell you which is Si Sloan's opponent."

"Hi Perkins, you—you—there!"

Perkins turned and saw Hale. The crowd stopped, and saw Hale, wondering what the young man was about.

"I'd like to speak to you apart," said Dan Hale.

Now, Dan was somewhat taller than Perkins, rather dull near as good looking, and stood straight.

"Step it, pardner, out yonder," said Sloan. "We'n all be entertained, as through she wore a queen."

"I wish I could say for the people you refer to that they had the thousandth part of the humanity, the humanity part of the good qualities you and father possess."

"This is not a secret business affair, Hi. I don't want one that is concerned to everybody. It concerns the difference in the school and school."

"Oh, you are a teacher," said Sloan, contemplating Dan Hale critically.

"Anything for the place," said Perkins.

"Perkins, I don't know if you have any recommendations."

Massage From Hayes.

Miss Clara Kane will spend the summer with her grandfather at Flint.

Mrs Kittie Frounfelder, of Alanson, is visiting her parents, John Koppitz.

Spring flowers are plentiful, and we have been gathering bouquets for a week past.

The roads are drying up very rapidly, and will soon be in their normal condition.

Plank & Plank, of Carpenter, are doubling the power of their mill by putting in a new boiler and engine.

Winter wheat looks well. Farmers find it pays to sow more winter wheat and not depend on spring wheat altogether.

Last year Hayes voted one dollar on the hundred of valuation for highway tax. This year the highway commissioner reported fifty cents on the hundred as necessary, which was adopted, but being unsatisfactory to some of our citizens a motion to reconsider was carried and one dollar on the hundred was again voted.

If the act was legal we would like to see the benefits to the roads doubled. There are some complaints being made that the road districts do not show a particle more improvement with one dollar tax than they did with fifty cent. Here is a chance for the highway commissioner to put in some good work for the town.

Any one wishing board and lodging at $4.50 per week, will do well to call on Mrs. C Jamouneau, south end of Bridge St.

Many new houses are to be erected at Petoskey during the coming season.

A new summer resort on the shore of Burt lake, Cheboygan county, is proposed.

Rev. J. G. Inglis, of Petoskey, has received a call to a Presbyterian church in Chicago. He may accept.

One of Mr. White's docks at Boyne City collapsed Monday and shunted about 10,000 feet of lumber off into the lake.

Reports from Mackinac state that there is no ice in sight and nothing to prevent the passage of boats through the straits.

The Manistique handle factory burned last week. Loss $22,000, with with $8,000 insurance. The citizens are trying to raise a fund to help rebuild.

An Indian has found gold on land owned by George W. Bunder on the Menominee iron range near Norway. The vein is said to be eight feet wide at the surface.

Lewis Seymour, a farmer living near Sutions Bay, was killed recently. His team ran away. He was thrown from the wagon and the wheels passed over his head.

Willis F. Graham, railroad engineer died lately at LaFountain, Colorado. He was about twenty-four years of age, and an adopted son of Judge J. G. Kanodell, of Traverse City.

Under the Park bill for re-districting the state for state senators the twenty-eighth district would consist of Charlevoix, Antrim, Kalkaska, Grand Traverse, Benzie and Leelanaw counties, with returns to Grand Traverse.

Bellaire Bronze: Roswell Leavitt is hustling for right of way down near Williamsburg. —— Several railroad contractors have passed through Bellaire this week, inspecting the line of the C. & W. M. extension from Traverse City to Charlevoix, preparatory to making bids on the work of constructing the road. —— Thomas Rock, of Chicago, railroad contractor, was here on Tuesday. Contracts for the construction of "our" railroad are to be signed next week, and Mr. Rock will cause the "dirt to fly" soon thereafter. Mr. S. H. Beardsley, engineer, was along to point out the line.—— General Manager Heald has written a letter stating this company is ready to begin work on the railroad as soon as the right of way is secured, and that the matter must be closed at once; that the surveyors are now at work retracing the line and setting grade stakes, and will be at Bellaire soon.

Wolves are reported to be very numerous and ferocious in the northern part of the state. James and John Gillespie own a small logging camp at Muller Lake, twelve miles south of Cheboygan. The two brothers were working in the woods Friday, when James' axe slipped and cut a terrible gash in his leg. John bound up the wound and started to carry James to the nearest house. The load and the deep snow were too much for him, and James ordered his brother to run to the nearest house and get help. John did so and was soon at the village, where a party was raised to bring in the wounded man. A stamp of even a mile brought them to the vicinity and shouts were sent up to cheer James. No answer was returned, but in their places came savage yelps from a lot of wolves. The crowd pushed on only to find a pack of wolves fighting over a lot of bones and clothing where John had left his brother a short time before, while all around the snow was stained with blood. The howling crowd were unarmed, save with axes, but they chased the wolves off and brought the bones back for burial.

Petoskey Democrat: Engineer Northrup, of the C. & W. M., arrived last evening with a party of right contractors, with whom he had driven over the entire route of the extension from Traverse City via Bellaire, for the purpose of enabling them to secure information to assist them in making bids on the work.

Grand Rapids Democrat: The proposed expansion of the Chicago & West Michigan from Traverse City to Petoskey, has already been the means of advancing the road's stock quotations two or three points. That the eastern capitalists who own the road place a large degree of confidence in the new management, and in the extended line's ability to earn fixed charges and dividends, is evidenced in that all of the $15,000,000 bonds were disposed of before the time set for closing the option. The bonds are issued by the Chicago & North Michigan road, under which the extension is organized, but are guaranteed by the Chicago & West Michigan. They are entirely in $1,000 denominations. Wednesday the officers and directors of the Chicago & North Michigan met in this city and confirmed the arrangements between it and the Chicago & West Michigan, the latter binding itself to build and operate the line for the former. It is understood the contract for the entire line from Traverse City to Petoskey will be let April 25.

The citizens of Bear Creek township, Emmet county, in which Petoskey is located, have done some lively hustling to secure the right-of-way through the county for the Chicago & West Michigan's extension, and have nearly completed the work. They are now circulating a call for a special election to vote on bonding the township for $5,000 in aid of the road. The proposition is sure to carry. The extension was surveyed to run directly through the Bay View Camp ground, but the cottagers made a vigorous kick, resulting in the Grand Rapids & Indiana's right-of-way being chartered between Petoskey and Bay View. The latter road in view of the competition it will soon have to meet, is building a spur track to Kirby's docks at Petoskey. The Chicago & West Michigan, however, is said to have already contracted for the handling of all freight which Kirby's line of boats, the Soo City, the Charlevoix and the Lawrence, shall carry this season. Kirby's docks are built out into Traverse Bay 500 feet, and are connected with the shore by a bridge of that length. These were used in building them over 500,000 feet of timber and lumber and 1200 cords of stone, and as much more stone will be put in before the fall storms set in. These docks, with two railroad lines running to them will probably greatly increase Petoskey's shipping.

From Clayton.

Mr. D. H. Tripp has accepted a position as night watch in Petoskey and will move his family there soon.

Chas Mayes has bought the horses and lot of Mr. Tripp and will move as soon as vacated.

Fred Smith has been laid off a few days from work with rheumatism.

Mr. W. H. Hanson is building a feed room on the back of his store. "That's right."

The engine is being built on the M. E. church and the bell will soon be here.

Rena Purhard's school commences Monday, April 20th in the Johnson district. Success to our whilom.

Mr. Henry Hotchkiss and family who have been quite sick with la grippe are improving and Mr. Seiple has returned to his place of business.

W. H. Ellis has a large stock of spring hats, also a fine stock of dry goods.

George McClellan and Sam Haas are on the sick list.

Norwood Notes.

Nash's mill started up Monday. This will be wild news to some.

Quite a good many potatoes coming into market at 35 cents per bushel.

New fences going up all around town.

Now, Mr. Postmaster, get to work on the roads right away.

The Charlevoix was in Saturday, first trip.

Fred Stebbins, of Atwood, was in town one Sunday.

Art Meech is hauling a cargo of hardwood for Nash.

Dances this week Friday at the hall.

G. V. Nash is going to have a drive well put down and a wind mill put up. Wanted, of Traverse City, to do the work.

The Ladies' Aid Society are papering the parsonage and doing other necessary work before the arrival of Mr. Lee's family, who come about May first.

Miss Kate Meech, who the past two weeks has been visiting relatives here, left for Chicago Sunday. She will visit with friends from New York May 12th, for a trip through Europe.

Mrs. Hiram Carter celebrated her 81st birthday one day last week in a very pleasant manner. Thirty-five of her lady friends called on her in a body and spent a very pleasant afternoon.

All we can say is that we feel sorry for the H. H. Co. if they don't come by the shore route.

The W. C. T. U. meet with Mrs. Day's Wednesday this week.

The band boys are going to get their right away if they can get the stuff to put up for them.

Sheaper's meat market is now in operation.

Mrs. Chas. Vosbing is visiting her parents with her four weeks old baby.

E. W. Goulter was in town Monday. He has let contracts for one thousand acres of peas and three hundred acres of beans.

A. H. Van Pelt left Tuesday morning on the Charlevoix for Chicago.

VOL XXII. NO--43. CHARLEVOIX, MICH., WEDNESDAY APRIL 29, 1891. WHOLE NO. 1,115.

POISONED! $50.00 REWARD

We print the picture of Fireman H. L. Strenning of engine Co. No. 18, situated at 458 W. 12th St., Chicago, Ill. Mr. Strenning had been suffering for several years from Kidney and Liver Complaints, which finally poisoned his blood with Rheumatism. The following is Mr. Strenning's own statement of his Terrible Suffering. "During the time of the big Chicago fire I was taken down with a severe cold. My Liver and Kidneys commenced giving a great deal of trouble and finally poisoned my blood with rheumatism. The pains in my back were so terrible that I can not describe them. At every quick attempt to rise from a sitting position the pain would become so severe that it would almost take my breth away. During the many years of my suffering I did not know what it was to get a good night's sleep, and while I did sleep it was due to sheer exhaustion. I tried physicians and medicines, but they could not even give me relief. I commenced using Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic Cure after I had lost all faith in everything. I had used this medicine only a few days when my pain was all gone and before I had used three bottles of it I was entirely well. I am feeling better now than I have felt in many years. My kidneys give me no more bother. In fact, I feel stronger and more vigorous than ever before. Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic cure is a long felt want. I have since induced many of my friends to use this truly great medicine and it has done wonderful work in every case. Anyone doubting the truth of this statement can see me any day at the engine house. It will always afford me great pleasure to say a good word for Abbott Bros.' remedy." 5000 Reward for any case of Rheumatism or Neuralgia we can not cure. Sold only by F. G. Hynes & Co., Charlevoix, Mich., who can furnish local testimonials.

—Three railroads for Charlevoix in the next three years!

S. H. Beardslee returned from Grand Rapids Thursday.

H. L. Page, of East Jordan, spent Sunday with Dr. LeFevre.

Wm. Ferguson has sold his Mason street residence to H. Bartlett.

Mr Thacker of Thacker & Gordon, went to Traverse City yesterday.

—A Fox has something to say about teas and coffee in their ad. this week.

—Rev. H. H. Wellman has leased his Main street residence to Sam Lobdell.

The Charlevoix Hardware Co. have a change of advertisement this week. Read it.

—Miss Annie Metcalf resumes her position behind the teacher's desk in Bear Lake next week.

—Fox & Miller are receiving large invoices of boots and shoes, and invite their patrons to call in.

—Will Newman has resigned his position in the postoffice, and Mel Livingstone takes his place.

—Leroy Hamlin left yesterday for Milwaukee to resume his position as engineer on the tug J. H. Merrill.

The timber for the repairs to the Harbor revetment arrived last week from Manistee by the barge Hilton.

—Mrs. Alex. Cameron returned home from Pittsburg Friday, accompanied by her brother, James Rogers.

—Frank Sears went to Manistee on the steam barge Hilton Sunday. He will visit Chicago before he returns.

—Nearly every horse in the Traverse City livery stables were out last week, most of them with railroad contractors.

—Married.—By the Rev. C. T. Stout, on Sunday, April 26th, at Petoskey, Mr. Charles Hale and Miss Etta Cram, of Undine.

—H. Lee Iddings returned home from Albion Friday. His mother accompanied him, and will remain for the summer.

—Chas. Lamereaux, John Cook and George Eggleston left Saturday for Traverse City, to work on the new opera house.

—Beaver Island has at last succumbed to the grippe, and they had to send a tug for a Harbor Springs doctor last week.

—Sam Lobdell, cigars, and Jim Parsons, candy, chartered the tug Rawson for a trip to Beaver Island one day last week.

—Geo. W. Counter and Jos. Beauvais went to Manistee Sunday by the steambarge Hilton, to begin their government job there.

—Miss S. B. Kirwin, the talented young singer and vocal instructor, of this place, sang last Sunday at the Episcopal church in Petoskey.

—A pointer for those looking over Northern Michigan for manufacturing locations: Navigation opened here 10 days earlier than in Little Traverse Bay or Pine Lake.

—The influence of railroad extension is already noticeable. Real estate is moving and strangers arrive daily to look over the town with the view of investment and business.

—Sherwood, the enterprising boot and shoe man, has, besides greatly enlarging his stock, beautified his store to an extent that makes it one of the most attractive places of business in Charlevoix.

—Baker & Son, the pioneer blacksmiths and agricultural implement firm, have a change of advertisement this week. They report increasing trade, and want the farmers to call and see them when in town.

—"Our Uncle David Ward" seems to have "got a move on him," and will connect us with Detroit by "the iron sinews of commerce." We hope Mr. Ward may live long to enjoy the benefits of his pass, and draw good dividends from his investment.

—On Monday morning last Dr. Levi Lewis began improvements on his Opera House block. The brick on the north side are being taken down, and that side will be covered with cope siding. The depression of 14 inch in that side of the building will be righted and the structure placed beyond any further danger.

—A hint to those who miss their SENTINEL occasionally. Last week one was found on a Charlevoix show case, left there by some accommodating neighbor, and another was picked up in the road, having been dropped by some person other than the one to whom the paper belonged. The publisher or the postmaster are not always to blame.

—A trip to Chicago and return by the Northern Michigan line is a pleasure indeed. Accommodating officers, a first class cuisine, and every comfort afforded on their steamers renders the journey truly enjoyable. The City of Charlevoix, Lawrence and Sun City will constitute a line of steamers that will suit Northern Michigan "to a knock-down."

—Mr Henry Oakly, of the Manistee firm of Oakly & Christianson, lumber inspectors, has established a branch of that concern here, and will hereafter keep a man permanently here. Mr Oakly is now in charge of the business here, and will probably remain for the summer. The firm is a well known and reliable inspection agency, and Charlevoix is fortunate in securing this branch.

—John T. Kirkpatrick, of this place, has taken a contract to build a large resort hotel at Bower's Harbor, near Traverse City. Saturday he left for the place, taking with him the following Charlevoix workmen: S. Alcox, Wm. Garland, Wm. Phelps, Irvin Henry, John Tooley, M. J. Bartlett, Ed. Wood, Charles Wheeler, Thos. Shapton, John Zeran, Wm. Wood, Chas. Hull, Frank Wrisley. Anson Brown goes as cook in the boarding house. Mr. Kirkpatrick will employ about forty men on the job.

—Charlevoix is to be treated to a musical feast. It is announced that the Albion Quartette, of Ada Rapids, will give a concert at Lewis Grand Opera House on the evening of May 5th. The Quartette is composed of Miss Sarah Daniels, Miss S. B. Kirwin, J. E. Daniels and S. P. Lackey, with Prof. Arthur Nelson, of this place, as accompanist. Most of our readers are already acquainted with some of the quartette, and that the concert will be a choice musical event goes without saying. Music-lovers should give them a generous reception.

Boyne City News.

E. B. Perkins awoke on Thursday morning to find his left side partially paralyzed. He is slowly recovering, and entertains a hope of a complete recovery.

Boice's old mill, recently used as a barn, burned on Friday night. A yoke of oxen and several pigs perished in the flames.

White & Co. bought 1280 acres of land in Wilson township recently.

Lumber stowers asked 40 cents per hour of the schooner Elgin on Monday morning. The result was, the lumber stowers watched the captain and his crew stow the cargo. White & Co. have no trouble in securing good men to load at 30 cents.

The mill will commence running nights on May 4th.

Wm. H. White recently bought the Corbett property south of the school house, and is erecting another wing to the house, making it a desirable residence.

Postmaster Handy spent a few days in the Rapids last week.

Vessels loaded by White & Co. since the ice went out: Schr. J. C. Baier, 170,000 feet; A. J. Dewey, 210,000 feet; Sardinia, 130,000 feet; Surprise, 205,000 feet. The schooner Elgin is now loading.

Undine.

Married—At Petoskey, Sunday the 26th, by Rev. C. T. Stout, Mr. Chas. Hale and Miss Altie Cram, both of Undine. Their many friends join in wishing them a long and happy life.

The John L. Green came in Monday morning and is loading lumber at Cram Whitford & Sons for Sheboygan.

The young people gathered at Mr. Cram's Monday evening and had a dance in honor of the wedding.

Mrs. McNally, Sr., has been suffering with the grippe the past week.

An Enterprising Firm.

For an example of pluck, push, and genuine "Young America" business sense, we point to the firm of Nicholls, Lewis & Bates, lumbermen of this place. They came into the business as successors of John Nicholls in the beginning of 1890. At the close of the year, besides making large improvements in their plant, and almost a thorough rebuild of the mill, they had cut 2,500,000 feet of hardwood lumber, and 1,000,000 feet of hemlock. This year, thus far, they have cut 1,500,000 feet, and will make the total cut of the year 5,000,000 feet. From the start they have made the business a success, and they deserve it all.

THE SAILORS.

Gossip For the Marines---Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

The schooner Jennie Mullen has been sold at Milwaukee for $3,000.

Seven vessels entered this port last Sunday, and all of a large class.

Capt. R. W. Tullock has bought a half interest in the schooner Fleetwing.

The tug Avery was slid into the water Saturday, and will soon be in commission.

D. S. Way left Monday on the tug Rawson for Port Huron after a small steamer yacht for Jos. Beauvais to run between the village and the resorts, and outside to Mt. McSauba.

The steambarge Hilton made a quick trip last week to Sheboygan with lumber, and returned to load timber for Crouter & Beauvais' Manistee harbor contract. She left Sunday, and will return for another cargo.

Capt. Robertson, of the steamer Petoskey, during the two seasons he has commanded that popular vessel, made 60 trips each season, running in the aggregate 43,500 miles. Capt. Robertson has established a reputation as one of the most competent and popular lake masters.

The U. S. Survey steamer Gen. W. S. Hancock, arrived in port Friday, and remained here until Monday. Her principal passenger was Col. Dunbar, assistant engineer. The Colonel took careful soundings of both channels, and other observations, upon which to base calculations for the work to be done here this season.

Capt Thomas Richardson, of the steambarge Hilton, was master, of the schooner Ward away back in the early seventies. He was relating to a gentleman Sunday how he once got barred in here, and was compelled to dig his way out with the long handled scraper then in use. The Ward was an old Detroit river steamer converted into a schooner.

After all the harbor channel turned out to be in fairly satisfactory condition. Thus far no steamer has had any serious trouble in entering port. But the commerce of Charlevoix and Pine Lake requires more water. We are justified in asking for a good twelve feet depth from Lake Michigan to Pine Lake, and we are assured that during May our request will be granted.

Common Council.

At the regular meeting last Friday evening, A. J. McLeod was elected Village Marshal, at a salary of $200.

The Committee on fires reported in favor of erecting an engine house on the north side for the hand fire-engine.

The Committee on ordinances were instructed to draft an ordinance prohibiting cattle, horses, etc., from running at large within the corporation; also to draft an ordinance repealing the dray license.

The Committee on streets reported in favor of discontinuing part of sidewalk on Newman street between Alice and Bridge streets.

F. W. Mayne was employed as Village Attorney, at a salary of $100.

The druggists' bonds were approved.

Opening and Special Sale.

The dry goods emporium of A. T. Washburn is reveling in elegance, in greeting of spring, and in celebration of his annual spring opening. Specially imported palm-leaves embelish elegant displays of new goods, and tasteful decorations everywhere adorn beauty itself. The store is an exhibit that is worthy of a visit, even if purchases are not contemplated; but in the midst of such a bower of beauty, the visitors, especially the ladies, must purchase. The spring opening began yesterday, and will continue during the week. A special sale is also advertised.

CHARLEVOIX, APRIL 25, 1891.

It is evident from the returns of the recent Election on the vote for the constitutional amendment increasing the salary of the Attorney General from $1500 to $2,500, that the people concluded that Mr. Ellis having accepted the nomination on the party ticket knowing that the salary was only $1500 per year was bound by his agreement. The chairmen of both the Democratic and Republican state committees issued circulars favoring the increase as being just, but the clear people could not see it and voted down the measure.

The President's trip through the south has been an ovation from the start. His speeches have been refinished and to the point and he has not had to consult or quote from an encyclopedia, either. Wherever he has visited, the people have turned out en masse and exhibited a patriotic spirit and shown a disposition to do honor to the chief magistrate of the nation. This is the proper spirit and is the best evidence that the "war is over" and the United States is a nation. The south is indebted to the Republican policy of protection for the rapid development of that section and it is right and proper that they should do honor to the president who represents that policy.

There is no one thing in connection with the McKinley tariff that worries the Democratic free traders worse than the duty on tin plates. They had claimed that tin plates never had been manufactured in this country and never could be profitably in view of competition with British manufacturers. That the McKinley bill imposed a tax on the poor man's dinner pail. That the people would be burdened with a tax on every tin utensil they used in the household. The tariff on tin plate does not go into effect until next July, but already a number of manufactories are turning out the plate that is superior in quality to any of the imported article and are furnishing it at a price as low as has been charged for 10 years.

Our Democratic friends are belittling the result of the spring election for a democratic victory. They understand its real sign—some well enough, but they are industriously telling it from the people, and hoping the Republicans of the state will overlook it. Last year, including two districts stolen from them, the Republicans lost eight congressional districts in Michigan, saving but three congressman out of eleven. This spring, accepting the figures of the Democrats themselves, Judge Montgomery has reported majorities in seven of the eleven congressional districts, among them his own (the fifth) and has carried the state by a majority of about 250, according to the figures of the State Democrat. The conclusion is plain. If the vote last fall was a "revolution" and made Michigan a Democratic state, as the Democrats claim, then the vote this spring is also a revolution, since it gives to the Republicans a majority of the congressional districts, and makes Michigan again a Republican state. There is the significant part of the affair which our Democratic friends would like to have kept quiet. After three months of rule the people have discovered them they have lost five congressional districts, and are again in the minority. Michigan is a Republican state.—State Republican.

The speeches which are being made by President Harrison on his pleasure trip reveal the marvelous wisdom and soundness of thought which characterized his public utterances at Indianapolis during the eventful period of the Presidential campaign of 1888. From the period of his nomination until election day he was called up daily and even hourly to make brief addresses to delegations of visitors from the various states. He was always felicitous in his remarks, always startfully Republican, invariably patriotic, noteworthy for manly, and above all God fearing. Republicans who had hesitated to consider his candidacy for president as fortunate, because he was in a measure an "unknown quantity," breathed easier as each day's new record of his public expressions was published, while Democrats were were nonplused that he made no slip of the tongue which they could criticise. When the campaign ended in his election, no one could deny that he owed his success in very large part to the set mate the people had placed upon his character by reading his reported addresses. The president is simply repeating in the south the same exhibition of his powers of plain common sense, earnest and thoughtful oratory with which he so perfectly rounded out and made victorious the campaign of 1888.—New York Press.

WHAT STEAMSHIPS COST.

Money Invested in the Great Ocean Grayhounds Crossing the Atlantic.

The gross cost of carrying such a vessel as the Majestic across the Atlantic does not fall far short of £4,000 says Harper's Monthly. As any one of the old-fashioned steamers of the early transatlantic lines at 3,000 tons costs £3,000 for the voyage, or double passage out and home. I am probably not very wide of the mark in making this estimate for a vessel measuring more than three times as much, as the money needed will not increase in a direct ratio with the increased size.

But if we are tempted to believe that the profits made in this ocean trade are correspondingly large, we need remember the vast capital embarked even in one vessel of 10,000 tons. A first-class merchant steamer of the ordinary trade type costs at least £25 per ton weight of the hull, and £15 per ton weight of her power of engines. Thus the cost of the Teutonic's engines should make a quarter of a million less, very small.

The Union steamer Alaska of almost 6,000 tons is worth about £500,000. Probably the Teutonic could not be bought for half a million. And it does not take a professional accountant to reckon that it needs a great deal of money to pay a reasonable dividend on so much.

In this connection I can give some statistics about a notorious passenger steamer, the length of which was 450 feet, whereas the Majestic measures 582. The displacement of this vessel at load-draught amounts to 9,500 tons, and the weight of her hull to 4,800. Each ton of this cost £25; thus the price given for her hull was £121,000.

On the whole, I am inclined to think that these figures give a certain financial amplitude and magnificence to our notions concerning the steamship trade in the west, without saying anything about our vessels which carry freight and passengers to all points of the compass.

American Bastard Hunter.

Isn't it about time for the American girl and her audacious mamma to seriously consider the demonstrative qualities of those young sprigs of European nobility who are in the matrimonial market for revenue only? Social distinction is what our women expect to achieve when they enter into these alliances. They are willing to pay for it literally, but now object the duty get what they bargain for? Take the case of Mrs. Burke-Roche, whose divorce suit is now the talk of two continents. Lake other American girls, she expected to be placed at the pinnacle of fashion and fame through her marriage to the youngest son of an English peer. Instead of that she found that she was looked on as merely a convenient provider of money, and when her father refused to contribute further to her husband's needs she was thrown of like so much useless luggage.

Had she imported beforehand into the history of this young man, she would have learned that he could hardly contribute to her happiness in any way whatever. Her dreams would have been shattered before she had gone to the length of assuming his name. But she would have escaped the exaggerated anxiety that is now her lot. The rage for European bankrupts is really a national evil. It lowers our girls in the estimation of sensible people everywhere. It is also very rare indeed our girls are satisfied with those rogues when the glamour of the honeymoon has worn off. They find that she found that the marriages are not forth-coming, and that their partners take none of the qualities that go to make a happy home, disappointment follows in rapid succession and finally the burden is found too great to be borne in silence.—N. Y. Recorder.

MUSIC THAT SCARES A CAT.

Certain Tunes That Almost Drive Old Nero Into Fits.

Perhaps no cat in the United States (Nero must be so much as old Nero. He can endure piano playing for a while, but singing is a thing to him, whistling drives him out of the room in a hard origin in operation nearly sends him into fits. This may seem strange, but it is true.

Not long ago, while Nero was basking in the sun on the front doorstep of his residence, two fellows with a violin, piano passed in front of him. Nero was evidently asleep, for he paid no attention to the men. In a moment one of the peripatetic musicians grabbed the crank of the instrument and as he turned it he said, bottling strains of "My Grandfather's Clock" rent the air in loud, enormous tones.

Instantly Nero was on his feet, with his fur on end and his green eyes blazing. In another moment, after emitting a few vicious "spits," he was running down the street as if his tail were afire. And he didn't halt until he was out of sight and sound of his tormentors.

Even that old and favorite melody, "The Old Oaken Bucket," has no charms for Nero. One day, as he was doing before a grate fire, little Eddie came in loudly whistling the air of the well-known song. Nero at once began to squirm, cast an appealing glance at the boy and then stalked out into the hall, thence to the back yard and then perched himself upon a fence. And there he remained until little Eddie had been sent out on the street to play. Then, and then only, he returned to the house to resume his nap.

"Annie Rooney," "Down West McGinty," "Bedeen on Our Hock" and "Such Was Mike's Wife Her's Down" are his particular abomination, no matter whether they are rendered vocally or instrumentally. Each and every one of them seems to make his ears sore, for when he hears one of these tunes he rubs his head with first one paw, then the other, and loses no time in escaping from the place of torture.

But if there is one tune more than another that gives him pain it is "Only Father Blessem, Only a Faded Flower." When that gazes upon his ear he moves more quickly, and the infliction is prolonged by howls most dismal.

Nero has always had these peculiarities for as he grows older they seem to become more pronounced.—N. Y. Mail.

PAINTINGS OF POMPEII.

Valuable Remains of the Light They Throw on Ancient Painting.

Of all the remarkable things found at Pompeii none are more important than the pictures, on account of the light they throw on ancient painting. While many masterpieces of Greek sculpture and architecture have come down to us, the Greek paintings, from the fragility of their nature, have perished, and it is chiefly to the Roman copies that we find some trustworthy hint of what the Pompeii painters were and every room was decorated with frescoes, some a winner in the Edinburgh Review. The best of these were at first removed for their preservation to the museum at Portici, which was incorporated into the Naples museum early in this century.

Descriptions can hardly give an idea of the charm of these pictures of rich, harmonious coloring, which many art critics have compared to Titian or the serene, joyous conceptions of human life, of the grace and dignity of the figures. Stately gods and goddesses, sporting cupids, bacchantes, fauns, centaurs, dolphins, arabesques are multiplied in infinite variety. Most of the subjects are taken from Greek mythology, but some represent scenes from the daily life of the Pompeiians, and throw much light on their habits and occupations. With few exceptions the subjects are treated with taste and delicacy. In a civilization where to the gods themselves were ascribed the passions of mortal man, it is not to be wondered that all sometimes admitted in the frescoes, since they have been removed from public view to the museum and remained in the dark ever since. The Pompeii painters were decorators, and their pictures which

A head and over the crowd.

"Will you jump again, Mr. Shaun?"

"Shaun Lanford on Bash again!"

"How high can you jump?"

"Standing or running?"

"Anyhow."

For answer Bash put his right hand up to his chin.

"I don't believe it."

"Put a stick up a-strong, fellows—big enough for Bash—and he can do it."

Bob Bash and Shaun held a rail about four feet from the ground.

Shaun placed his back to it and jumped over.

The big man caught his hands.

They passed the rail as high as his chin.

He walked off, then suddenly bounded again in the air only a little.

The fine feat roused with another.

"Now let Shaun try and Bash, you are."

Shaun jumped three times, but failed to come within three inches of the height Bash jumped.

"Bash high can you kick?" demanded Jim Lanford.

"As high as your head, Jim, if you'd bend down."

Shaun had backed against the crowd.

"Yes, I remember, Bash, the time you kicked my hat off."

"Why, I remember, Shaun, the time I knocked your hat off."

"Yes, I remember, Bash, the time you kicked me."

"Why, I remember, Shaun, the time I knocked you."

NEARER BY 60 MILES

Detroit and Charlevoix to Be Drawn Together.

David Ward's New Railroad Has Been Incorporated, and When Completed Will Rescue a Large Corner of Michigan From the Hands Leading to Chicago.

Detroit Evening News.

An important paper has been filed in the office of the secretary of state important in that it shows a rich section of Michigan into contribution to Detroit, and acts as a set off to the encroachments into the northwestern quarter of the lower peninsula by the Chicago railroads. The paper referred to locates the articles of incorporation of the Grayling & Charlevoix railroad, of which David Ward, of Detroit, is the principal promoter.

The road pierces the heart of Mr Ward's magnificent tract of pine and hardwood timber, and of course it was this timber that led to its projection, but at the same time the line is to be constructed with great care and thoroughness, so that when completed it will be a permanent and thorough addition to the railway systems of the state. The grading has been in progress for some time, and owing to the fact that the course of the road takes it across the ridges and streams of the country traversed the work has been peculiarly heavy, but at the present time only a few miles remains to be completed.

The capital of the company, as set down in the charter, is $200,000, divided into 200 shares of $100 each. The subscribers to the stock are David Ward, who owns 6994 shares, and George K. Root, Detroit; Willis C. Ward, Detroit; Fred C. C. Fay, Auburn, N. Y.; Franklin B. Ward and Henry C. Ward, Pontiac; and Robert M. Chamberlain, Detroit, who own one share each. The road will run from Grayling, which is the seat of Crawford county, through Otsego, Kalkaska, Antrim and Charlevoix counties, to Charlevoix, and will be in the neighborhood of 58 miles long. The northern terminus will be at East Jordan for the present. It is not known just how soon the cars will commence to run, and they may not do so in a year or two, but having the grading once completed the company will be in a position to commence operations at any time that may seem expedient.

The advantages that may be claimed for the line are apparent. At South Arm or East Jordan connection is made with boats that run to Charlevoix and points along the shore of Lake Michigan. At Grayling the Michigan Central is reached, making almost an air line from the lake connection to the Saginaw valley and thence to Detroit. It is hardly probable that Mr. Ward will operate the line himself, as he says that he feels that the management of a railroad, with its multitude of detail, is not a task he cares to undertake, so that it is altogether likely a lease will be made to some of the lines crossed or connected with. At the present time the road touches the G. R. & I. at Alba, and in a short time will be in connection with the C. & W. M. In any event, the east side of the state will receive a large benefit, while Detroit will be placed 60 miles nearer the Charlevoix region, with its wealth of timber, trout, business and sport, than it is now by any route.

From Marion to Mackinac.

Cadillac Express: The stately form of J. M. Ashley, Jr., was noticed on our streets on Thursday and Friday last. In a brief interview he disclosed some plans which he affirmed the managers of the Toledo, Ann Arbor & North Michigan railroad propose to carry out as rapidly as practicable. The much discussed extension to Mackinaw will begin at Marion, or at a point not over two miles from that station, and proceed directly toward the straits, to which point the road will be built upon the line offering the best advantages of light grades and future business. Fifty miles of road are to be completed this year. Mr. Ashley left on the north bound G. R. & I. train Friday afternoon, for Kalkaska, from which point he will go over one of the projected lines by private conveyance.

C. & W. M. Matters.

During the past week the line of the C. & W. M. extension from Traverse City northward has been thoroughly covered by contractors and engineers, making estimates upon which to base their bids for the work of grading. It is understood that the bids are to be opened at Grand Rapids to-morrow, 29, and probably work all along the line will be in progress by May 15th.

Sanitary Matters.

To the Citizens of Charlevoix:

As public Health Officer I would offer a few suggestions regarding sanitation and prevention of disease. First, I would request every citizen to thoroughly clean up and remove any refuse that may have accumulated during the winter, especially vegetable matter. The best way to dispose of this is to burn it. Where dish-water is thrown out of the back door or kitchen window the earth should be disinfected with plenty of common salt, as typhoid fever has has been known to originate from such a source.

All privy vaults should be disinfected as often as once a week, especially during the spring and summer months, and even then they are a source of danger if the water supply is within one hundred feet. Chloride of lime, blue vitriol, carbolic acid are all good disinfectants.

Ordinarily these precautions are disregarded until disease breaks out in some form or another, and as the victims are suffering the penalty of their neglect, the neighbors are complaining of the deplorable condition of sanitary affairs on certain premises, while their own may be equally as bad.

Let every householder obey the sanitary laws themselves, and then look after their neighbors and report any instance of violating at once to the health officer.

In conclusion, I will say a few words regarding contagious diseases, especially diphtheria. How shall we avoid it? By a strict observance of sanitary laws. Never permit a child to remain in a room where there is a sore throat, if there is any fever connected with it, or any white patches of membrane on the tonsils. While an adult might not be very sick, the children are liable to contract diphtheria in a malignant form. The State Board of Health have placed great stress upon that fact, as statistics show that a majority of the cases originate in that way. Always have suspect for a diphtheria patient when you see one on a house. Don't rush to because some unscrupulous person says it is not diphtheria, for they might be mistaken.

E. W. LETSWE, Health Officer.

Northern Michigan News.

James Pratt, father of E. S. and J. F. Pratt, of Traverse City, died at his home in Fenton, Mich., recently, at the age of 79 years.

It is time months since a death occurred in Beltaire, although it has a population of about 600. This makes the undertakers weary.

The Kalkaskian says that J. M. Ashley was there on the 17th inst. looking up the extension of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad north.

The Citizen, Boyne City, warns its patrons that "we cannot live and run a printing office in this town on either wind or promises" and threatens to advertise all accounts for sale that are not promptly settled.

Traverse City is becoming the great horse market of all northern Michigan. There are located several of the largest livery and sale stables in the state, and great numbers of horses are brought there from the leading horse centres of the country, and from that point distributed throughout northwestern Michigan.

Petoskey Journal: Father Seifrath, who was parish priest at Little Traverse from 1855 to 1877, has spoken on the Freislander marriage, and contrary to the accepted view, it seems that he married them at Pine River—not Petoskey, instead of Harbor Springs. We extract from his account: 'I remember the marriage just as if it were yesterday.' and he remarkably put: 'My headquarters was at Little Traverse, but I was at Petoskey, nine miles distant on a pastorate visit, and was stopping at the house of a Frenchman called Kishata. It was on Saturday, Dec. 13, 1856, which I remember well because it was my 31st birthday. That evening about 9 o'clock three persons called at the house. They were Freislander, Mary Ann Petoskey and Louis Petoskey, both children by different mothers of the second chief of that name. I knew the parties because they all lived at Little Traverse, a few blocks from my house. Freislander was an Alsatian, and was rather a good looking man. He came from Beaver Island to Little Traverse, where he worked for Dick Cooper, a merchant, who was building a dock. Mary Ann lived in a house close by Cooper's store, and is living in the same house to-day. She was then a beautiful girl, 20 years of age, symmetrically formed, with fine features, rosy cheeks, and a pleasant, winning manner. When the trio came into the house Freislander said: 'We want to get married.' 'Why don't you get married at home, where you live?' said I. 'Then you can have your names called in church.' They both said that plan wouldn't do at all. They wouldn't wait; they must be married that night; and if I didn't marry them they would go to the Presbyterian minister or the justice of the peace. This rather forced my hand. Mary Ann and her mother were both members of my church, and attended mass regularly. I noticed that Mary Ann was constantly followed by white men, and considered it my duty to help her gain a position by which she could lead a moral life. I asked the usual questions and exacted the usual obligations which are presented by the church, and then married them as Catholics. They lived together in Little Traverse until Freislander went to war.

To Stop a Fire.

Facts worth knowing in regard to construction of boilers so as to derive the most benefit of fuel, as well as the most horse-power, out of the same size of boiler: I have taken the liberty, by reason of my experience, to meet some of the arguments that are advanced regarding this matter, 1st. To get in the proper manner of tubes, at the same time retaining a natural draft, free of choking, and with no gush of fire from the fire hold and yet keep a good body of water on material. 2d. By equalizing the stays in the boiler so as not to have a weak spot in boiler.

Parties desiring a first class boiler will find it for their advantage to call or write for particulars. Prompt attention given, and satisfaction guaranteed, as I make my own plans and specifications according to government requirements.

Parties will note that I have always on hand, consisting of boiler steel, rivets, and tubes of all sizes, sheet iron and steel, for iron, upholstery varnish, genuine tangnuh anti-friction babbit metal, steam fittings, boilers and engines.

After having carefully canvassed the town of Charlevoix in view of organizing a class in penmanship, I have decided, all things being considered, that it will be to my interest to abandon the idea at present, and return the coming fall and teach a class in this useful art during the month of September. We much regret, however, to disappoint those who wish to take the course this spring, but all those who desire to possess a neat business style of penmanship, remember the date and make early preparation for taking the course this fall. Observe the paper for further notice.

POISONED! $50.00 REWARD

We print the picture of Fireman H. L. Stresning of engine Co. No. 16, situated at 478 W. 12th St., Chicago, Ill. Mr. Stresning had been suffering for several years from Kidney and Liver Complaints, which finally poisoned his blood with Rheumatism. The following is Mr. Stresning's own statement of his Terrible Suffering: "During the time of the big Chicago fire I was taken down with a severe cold. My Liver and Kidneys commenced giving a great deal of trouble and finally poisoned my blood with rheumatism. The pains in my back were so terrible that I can not describe them. At every quick attempt to rise from a sitting position the pain would become so severe that it would almost take my breath away. During the many years of my suffering I did not know what it was to get a good night's sleep, and while I did sleep it was due to sheer exhaustion. I tried physicians and medicines, but they could not even give me relief. I commenced using Abbott Bros' Rheumatic Cure after I had lost all faith in everything. I had used this medicine only a few days when my pain was all gone and before I had used three bottles of it I was entirely well. I am feeling better now than I have felt in many years. My kidneys give me no more bother. In fact, I feel stronger and more vigorous than ever before. Abbott Bros.' Rheumatic Cure is a long felt want. I have since induced many of my friends to use this truly great medicine and it has done wonderful work in every case. Anyone doubting the truth of this statement can see me any day at the engine house. It will always afford me great pleasure to say what a good world for Abbott Bros.' remedy is." $50 Reward for any case of Rheumatism or Neuralgia we can not cure. Sold only by F. G. Hines & Co., Charlevoix, Mich., who can furnish local testimonials.

Their partners are over the gooseflow. They will continue the manufacture of the same brands both gentlemen are well known here, and will make the business a success.

—With the "snowy mantles" lately so unusual seal, the editor of the Democrat reminds his readers that W. S. Shupe has pasturage for 100 cows. If his knowledge of the section which he honors by his citizenship equalled his zeal in the bovine verse, he would have informed the poor persecuted cow-owners that Mr. Shupe's pasture is seven miles from Charlevoix, on the Lower peninsula. Where ignorance is bliss, it is the foolhardy kind of foolishness to be wise.

—Last week David C. Nettleton, of this place, purchased the A. Mon-tion interests of little, either from Jno. and found what is known as the Gaton building for one year. Mr. Ward Mr. Nettleton established himself, in the abstract and general real estate business. David C. Nettleton is one of the pioneers of Charlevoix County, and enjoys the reputation of being a man of the soundest judgment, and the strictest integrity. Business intrusted to him will be sure of careful attention and quick returns.

—The concert given by the Albion Quartette at Lewis Grand Opera House last evening, inspired both music and mortification. The entertainment was at once classic, refined and elegant. Having some little trouble defects in the stage printers, it was the best quartette of mixed voices that ever sang in Charlevoix, and the entertainment was a musical feast for music lovers. But the harmony of their sweet voices must have been disturbed with wicked thoughts as they beheld that audience—if indeed, it was large enough to be called an audience—of a powerful opera glass. The lack of numbers was to some extent made up in warmth. They were well received. If the Albion quartette has the courage to come once later this season, they will make a big.

Died, April 24th, Mrs. Nickerson, wife of Chas. Nickerson. The obsequies were held at the M. E. church, Rev. J. G. Holliday officiating. The L. O. O. F. and Rebekahs Lodges paid their respects to the departed.

Mr. A. J. Batchelor has traded his property here for a farm and his success in our own individual back door yards and seek for the possession. This talk about enterprise and push and get up and hustle in all moonshine. We don't have to. "Nature" will do the work—only let "nature" alone; she don't want any interference. Just as soon as you undertake to supplement the laws of nature with your modern notions about "enterprise" and "push" the old girl kicks. It won't do to depart from ancient customs. THE BIDS OPENED.

Situation of C. & W. M. Matters Up to Date.

The Grand Rapids Democrat of May 2, has the following concerning the contracts for the C. & W. M. Charlevoix extension.

"Thirteen bids were opened yesterday morning for constructing the C. & W. M. extension from Traverse City to Petoskey and Charlevoix. It will take several days to go through the mass of figures and arrive at a conclusion. The bidders were McLean & sons, of Coldwater, Winston Bros., of Minneapolis; McDonald Bros., of Grand Rapids; McIntosh Bros., Milwaukee; D. Fitzgerald & Bro., Lincoln, Neb.; Streeter & Co., Kalamazoo, McArthur Bros., Chicago; D. McDermid, Detroit; Sweet & Field, Grand Rapids; H. M. Clark, Chicago; Molberg, Cushing & Co., Omaha; Beck & Co., Chicago, William Steele, Ionia. McDonald Bros. have built a good deal of road about here, and last year constructed the C. & W. M. spur from Holland to Ottawa Beach. Fitzgerald & Bro. built the Traverse City extension of the C. & W. M. last year. Sweet & Field are Martin Lisweet and C. D. Field of this city. The latter is a son of Jack & Co. as Thos. Rock, who graded the Detroit, Bay City, Charlevoix and Pacific railway, and who has secured a judgment for $21,000 against the road. This afterwards was sold to General Manager Heald for $16,000. William Steele of Ionia is well known here, as, in his run a packing house and meat market here for some time.

Discussing the matter yesterday General Manager Heald said: "Out of these bids there are only four, or possibly five, which will be considered. Some of the figures are ridiculously low and give evidence of having been guessed at while others are high enough to make the contractor sweat to see what we will receive. If the Albion quartette has the courage to come once later this season, they will make a big.

"We are satisfied we will not be decided until Tuesday. On Monday the citizens of Petoskey will vote on the question of bonding the city for a bonus. To-night Superintendent Agnew and Contractor Smith will go to Petoskey to locate depot, yards, etc.

WHAT WE HEAR.

Mr. H. P. Grover, Assistant Attorney and in charge of the road, reports right of way matters about cleared up. Mr. Grover says we may expect to see a train here from Petoskey during the coming summer. At Petoskey the special election Monday resulted in a large majority for the railroad bonds. The officials have located the depot site there.

MISCELLANEOUS GOSSIP.

The extension contract was let yesterday to L. H. McLean, of Coldwater.

—Hon. Chas. S. Hampton, Democratic candidate and lodger-heads with the Democratic President of Petoskey, Mr. Rice. That gentleman is one who did not indorse the President-elect's style of politics, and consequently fell under the displeasure of the politicopolicy-editor. In last week's Petoskey end of the twins, Mr. Hampton devotes a column of abuse to the President, and incidentally remarks that he is "not a bad black ram." That man Hampton is enough to sour milk or stop a clock.

—The question of a bonus, begotten, never mind; it will come. No effort is necessary. All we have to do is to wait. The cows and do nothing to hinder it. Capitalists and manufacturers won't point our industries at us, but they will just make the earth tremble in their precipitate eagerness to get here. All we have to do is to stand right on sawing wood in our own individual back door yards and wait for the procession. This talk about enterprise and push and get up and hustle in all moonshine. We don't have to. "Nature" will do the work—only let "nature" alone; she don't want any interference. Just as soon as you undertake to supplement the laws of nature with your modern notions about "enterprise" and "push" the old girl kicks. It won't do to depart from ancient customs. So don't worry about Charlevoix; nature will pull her through all right. Let those backwoods towns do the hustling, we don't have to.

"Hit looked sich orterd."

The gossips did not get much satisfaction out of Sue Hank.

They did find much to enjoy in talking about the preparations for that June bride's wedding. The preparations were on a scale very unusual in that part of the country. The invitations were so numerous that the people wondered where Hank Dawson would put them all—where they would find room for them.

Neither Mr. Dawson nor his daughter explained to the curious. As for Ian Hank, he had little to say about anything concerning the arrangements.

"I leave all things to the business," he said when questioned.

But he had planned it all. It was the schoolmaster, not the blacksmith, who calculated the quantity of lumber it would be necessary to get out for the dancing floor on the ground before Hank Dawson thought of it.

It was Ian Hank who suggested the purchase of canned fruits and meats. He knew everything—could sum up the resources in the outlying districts. Hank Dawson called when he went out, with Chub's assistance, to make the purchases, things that were to be sent by express from the county seat.

When the wedding day arrived the country knew about it. When Hank Dawson had been to the expense of putting down a floor for a dance he had street people could accompany some, or maybe two, of his friends home.

Some of the unpublished provisions Hank had brought from the town were all hand and the distant city were eliminated from the refreshments.

"I want the season on the levee," he said, when Ian Hank had suggested, and his nerve came out boldly and the distant city were eliminated.

"I want the refreshments served on the levee."

Ian had no more to say. That was Hank Dawson's way. He was due at 8 o'clock, when he would join his daughter.

Sue was a handsome bride, but the bridegroom did not appear.

A carriage came to the door. Hank was considered a rascal in every way, at the moment.

At half past five his groomsman agreed with the bridegroom that it would be serving him just right if Chub Hank should be married instead of Sue Dawson.

The woman and girls began to speculate.

They somehow managed to get into the groom's room, locked in on him.

If Silsbum minutes to spare, and no sign of Dan Hank.

And yet, as everybody knew, he was only four miles away. He was to be over free to him could walk the distance in three quarters of an hour.

At six, the guests raged—nobody seemed to be responsible for the delay. Was no bridegroom—no sign of a bridegroom.

Hank Dawson moved around cheerily among the guests, with a smile on his face, bright, seemingly, as ever.

Ma's mysterious by he stood at the side of the pantaloon the dancers were dancing on, and said to strangers of his honor that all could hear.

"My friends, there seems to be some mistake somewhere. I don't know what it is. Ian Hank rode off to see—he ain't and shuck all I know. If he comes, why, we'll be married after supper just as well as before, but I ain'm going to wait a minute longer for anybody. I'm served immediately. We will sit down."

There were whispers and wonderings, many winks and wise glances, but the guests promptly sided Hank Dawson's invitation to the supper. Hank Dawson's cordial invitation to "eat everything—everything—everything!"

Of the guests of the women folks, Chub Dawson blundered, directing the assistants how to arrange the dishes. Nobody was in a hurry, as self-possessed as was he worst.

The supper was a success. The great crowd ate and drank and laughed and joked. The bridegroom was the constable, unexpected, something that overshadowed everything else, and yet did not interfere with the guests' appetites.

At the conclusion of the supper, Hank Dawson stood amidst the guests to give him their attention. Then he said, nearly any decorum for Ian Hank:

"This is a strange thing, friends. I promised you a wedding. I've done my part. The people here have done theirs. The only one to blame is Ian Hank."

"Father, father," said Chub softly, at his elbow. But Hank Dawson's eyes kindled, and his voice rang out bold and clear.

"I hear as well say it as think it. Ian Hank has failed to come to time. Why he—ain't here—what keeps him,—haven't any more idea than anybody here has. But I'll try to find out—to-morrow. Ian Hank's a good fellow in general, but when he—if he's sick he generally lets you know. Ian Hank's a good fellow, but he's—he's—he's—he's a good fellow, cut short just because—something happened to—or gone wrong. I don't know—he never—he's never—always reported—I'm—I'm—or as long as—you've a mind to."

A few of the men slipped their hands, but the women whispered to each other Sue Dobbins's mother, who said:

"Father's right. Enjoy yourselves, but I wuzz to—for one thing. It ain't Ian Hank's fault. If he isn't here, it's because—we don't know what he's gone—sick it. I won't say any more now—but if he's—I'm sure he's—I'm sure he's—you what I think is the matter. Now, go, for father's sake."

There was something in Chub's simple speech, and manner that reached all hearts. What did she mean?

But in the meantime they would dance, for the music had struck up, a lively air, caused the fiddler to contain neither to the young people, young and soon they were scattered in many figures, while the voice of the leader called them to their proper places to begin a dance.

The merriment was at its height when a ridiculous horse came into view.

The moment the horse galloped up to the house, Chub Dawson screamed and ran toward it. Hank Dawson followed her.

"Why Dave's horse, dad! Something's happened to him!"

The crowd heard Chub's cry and her exclamations of grief as she ran sprang to the horse, with its saddle shifty, and mood quite with as she strained the horse's neck.

"She, dad, see! There's a mark on the saddle."

Hank Dawson peered at the saddle, then said in a low tone:

"It's—it's nothing much, I reckon."

But Chub was at the horse's nose, and she, too, looked closer at the spot.

"It's blood! It's Dan's blood!"

Chub turned to the wondering crowd near her, and, pointing to the saddle, the saddle, screamed, rather that said:

"I can tell you what I kept back for to-morrow—he's been waylaid—they've waylaid him and killed him."

"Murdered!" said the preacher in awestruck tones.

These words fell upon the merry-makers.

When they separated later, to return to their homes, amusement found expression in threats of vengeance upon the perpetrators of Dan Hank's ugly deed. Dan Hank, for all believed he had been murdered.

CHAPTER VII.

THE PRISONER AGAIN.

"The things I spoke to no looked into at—and the—and the—"

His face was in a fever. The man neared him, and, with his head sway of Ian, who was compelled to accompany their friends on a long trip, and was anxious to assist him in clearing up what remained to be done preparatory to leaving the county.

Ian was a mind looking at the horse, which moved his head back and forward in a restless manner.

"Where the horse has been almost—I was thinking—I'm just as—I'm just—I'm just talking to you."

"Of the—the—the—Dan's—Dan's gone—Dan's gone—I know what turn things may take—I'm not—I'm not—I'm not that run limit."

"I know—I understand. You think Dan's gone—you think that because we can't find no sign of him. Hank's—Hank's—Hank's—and backed out of the marriage."

"My God, Chub! I didn't think that!"

"But you don't think I'm—I'm—I'm—

CHARLEVOIX, MAY 6, 1893.

Congress passes Sunday and Legislates for owners and a big row ensues or backdown by the Parliament of Illinois.

Incidentally, it may be remarked that "the tiger" is rapidly losing others from his old haunts in Chicago by the new Republican mayor, Hempstead Washburn.

It is a very brilliant idea of the Illinois legislature to serve time by working all night and sleeping nothing next day. Singer and Bingham seemed gone a long way, with some people.

The meeting of the tin plate men for the purpose of promoting the manufacture of tin plate, in the United States is pretty good evidence that this new industry is with us and intends to stay.

Detroit Harbor and St. Joseph, Mich., have been joined together, but Minneapolis and St. Paul are still keeping their distances, and East London and South Africa continue to eye each other sharply.

New York's Jack the Ripper was caught just 24 hours after he committed his hideous crime. London police should take an omen enough and learn a few things from our inspector bylines.

The Michigan Senate has passed the Blaine electoral bill, which provides for the election of presidential electors by congressional districts. It has not already become a law the governmental artist will become the most imperial figure in Michigan politics.

James G. Blaine can be the next President of the United States if he desires to be. The fact is patent to the most unobserving. The saddle-Sour friends who presume to state his wishes on the subject only add to the Blaine or popular demand that he shall be the next standard bearer of the people. Until he speaks, but little criticism will be given to rumors.

Americans will be interested in the report of the blowing up of the Chilian insurgent ironclad Blanco Encalada by a torpedo. It the news is verified it will afford additional proof of the value of torpedoes against big ironclads at the present day. And it will make Foreign nations, in case of a dispute with the United States, very cautious about sending their warships across the Atlantic to coops with Yankee torpedoes.

Mr. Dupuy as right in saying that it was not necessary for President Harrison's southern speeches to prove that the carpetbaggers with which Angelo Hogan's papers have made the public familiar, have "slandered a president who mentally and morally had no talent and courage to worthily administer the office of chief magistrate of 60,000,000 people." The earthquake, as the New York Times says truly says, made no impression on any sensible person, for President Harrison had long ago shown himself to be a lacking in American fire, foresight and aspiration, with moral tone enough to comprehend the interests of every section of the Union.

The great numbers of Canadians who are leaving that country for the United States are earning attention there, and Bishop Hanna, of Sherbrooke has written an open letter, in which he seeks to discourage the movement by pointing out the many opportunities for success which Canada presents in her vast forests, cattle ranges, fisheries, mines, and the millions of acres of farming lands awaiting tillage. The bishop's remarks are pertinent and reasonable, but there is yet one advantage which, above all others, attracts his people to our direction, namely the labor market, and causes the Canadians to willingly ignore the attractive pictures which he has drawn, never from fear, and face the crush of competition among strangers. It is the satisfaction of enjoying the progressive atmosphere and free institutions of the United States. Across the Canadian sees, while surrounded by his home from that of his American brother, there comes to the Canadian the hum of a busy, prosperous and industrious people, and with it an indefinable hunger for active participation in the affairs of this great commonwealth, with its unrivaled enterprise, prompt methods high wages, large comforts, and its fraternal equality and toleration. These are the influences which are inducing immigration from Canada. Leaving those, not all the other attractions presented by their own country can outweigh them.

Uncle Robert Makes Some Observations.

To the Editor:

Twice each year the footprints of mankind are stirred in our town. Once on the first of the new year, when they make them nine day resolutions, and again about the first of May, when the balmy breezes and genial sunshine is around us, egotism to new life. Invigorated by the cheering prospects of flowers and fruit, many who, through the balance of the year seem very indifferent as to whether they labor or not, will be out in the bright spring days digging as though the community were depending upon them for summer vegetables.

In Charlevoix has been to arouse this, alas, they weary of their efforts. They become lax, the weeds get the start, and their garden, like their New Year resolves, resume their normal condition.

One result of this characteristic some of good our citizens to a sense of their duty regarding the enforcement of the liquor law. Their minds have become enlightened—whether by the effects of the spring weather or some other cause I know not—to a realization of the fact that the law is a good one if properly enforced.

So, like good sensible men, they are forming or have formed a league to bring about a strict compliance with the law.

Now, Mr. Editor, I hope this effort will not be like some of our New Year resolves or spring garden work, but be lasting and fruitful. Not being permitted to join the league without subscribing to something that, as a temperance man, I thought was uncalled for, I have taken the means to make to the members of the league, and all others interested, a few suggestions, although I know they will not be well taken by the leaders of the league movement.

In enforcing the law, I hope the league will not be partial and select one class of violators, allowing others to go free. There are duties for certain officers, and penalties for their neglect. Let the league see to it that the officers do their duty, and then attend to the saloon keepers. I would here call their attention to the sections of the law covering these points were it not for the fact that the league has a man appointed for that purpose who can do it better than I can.

The league movement seems to be directed particularly at the saloon keeper, and it is very proper that he should be held strictly to the letter of the law. But I hope it will be remembered that if the officers do their duty the saloon keeper will be very wary about violating the law. Let the Marshal make his weekly rounds as required by law, let the Justice, when a drunk is before him, examine him as to where, and of whom he got his liquor. This in the past has been neglected. The drunks that have been arraigned have been handled only with a view of their punishment as disturbers.

In being unlawful to sell to an Indian, why have none of the many Indian drunks been examined as the law requires? Perhaps because the justices do not take the place of the constables and marshal and look up their own jobs. We hope the league will change this.

To some it may seem strange that it should be thought necessary to form a league for the enforcement of the liquor law in a community like this; but it is a fact that the enforcement of the law is woefully neglected. The boys may come home interestated; the father will fume and scold, and the mother whose heart is pierced, will weep and pray, yet neither of them will try to find out where the liquor came from. Is this strange indifference on the part of the parents induced by the reflection that they have been remiss in their duty toward their boys? has the careless way in which they have raised him been the first cause of his downfall? Perhaps such thoughts make moral cowards of us all.

Whatever the cause, it is a lamentable fact that, amid an apparent unconcern regarding the open saloon, many of our boys are on the downward road. For this reason the law and order league should have the encouragement of every good citizen so long as it is honestly for the enforcement of law; but, if the movement proves to be merely a semi-moral spasm, it will fail, and meet what it merits—popular contempt. Yours,

ROBERT MILLER.

The bishop's remarks are pertinent and reasonable, but there is yet one advantage which, above all others, attracts the people of our direction, namely the labor market, and causes the Canadians to willingly ignore the attractive picture which he has drawn, never mind how, and face the cruel, if competition among strangers. It is the satisfaction in enjoying the progressive atmosphere and free institutions of the United States. Across the "unsettled zone" which separate his home from that of his American brother, there comes to the Canadian the boom of a busy, prosperous and industrious people, and with it an indefinable longing for active participation in the affairs of this great commonwealth, with its unrivaled enterprise, prompt methods high wages, larger comforts, and its fraternal equality and toleration. These are the influences which are inducing immigration from Canada. Lacking these, not all the other attractions presented by their own country can outweigh them.

Uncle Robert Makes Some Observations.

To the Editor:

Twice each year the majority of mankind are stirred to action. Once on the first of the new year, when they make their mark due resolutions, and again about the 1st of May, when the balmy breezes and genial sunshine is arousing vegetation to new life. Invigorated by the cheering prospects of flowers and fruits, many who through the balance of the year seem very indifferent as to whether they labor or not, will be out in the bright spring days digging as though the community were depending upon them for summer vegetables.

In Charlevoix has been to arouse

But, alas, they weary of their efforts. They become lax. The weeds get the start, and their gardens, like their New Year resolves, resume their normal condition.

One result of this characteristic same of good our citizens to a sense of their duty regarding the enforcement of the liquor law. They think they have become enlightened—whether by the effects of the spring weather or some other cause I know not—to a realization of the fact that the law is a good one if properly enforced.

So, like good sensible men, they are forming or have formed a league to bring about a strict compliance with the law.

Now, Mr. Editor, I hope this effort will not be like some of our New Year resolves or spring garden work, but be lasting and fruitful. Not being personal to join the league without subscribing to something that, as a temperance man, I thought was unedifying. I have taken this means to make to the members of the league, and all others interested, a few suggestions although I know they will not be well taken by the leaders of the league movement.

In enforcing the law, I hope its league will not be partial and selective class of violators, allowing others to go free. There are liliths for certain officers and penalties for their neglect. Let the league see to it that the officers do their duty, and then attend to the saloon keepers. I would here call their attention to the sections of the law covering these points were it not for the fact that the league has man appointed for that purpose who can do it better than I can.

The league movement seems to be directed particularly at the saloon keeper; and it is very proper that he should be held strictly to the letter of the law. But I hope it will be remembered that if the officers do their duty the saloon keeper will be very wary about violating the law. Let the Marshal make his weekly round as required by law. Let the Justice, when a drunk is before him, examine him as to where, and of whom he got his liquor. This in the past has been neglected. The drunks that have been arraigned have been handled only with a view of their punishment as disturbers.

It being unlawful to sell to an Indian, why have none of the many drunks been examined as the law requires? Perhaps because the justices do not take the place of the constables and marshal and look up their own jobs. We hope the league will change this.

To some it may seem strange that it should be thought necessary to form a league for the enforcement of the liquor law in a community like this; but it is a fact that the enforcement of the law is wofully neglected. The boys may come home intoxicated; the father will fume and scold, and the mother, whose heart is pierced, will weep and pray, yet neither of them will try to find out where the liquor came from. In this seeming indifference on the part of the parents is followed by the reflection that they have been remiss in their duty toward their boys? has the careless way in which they have raised him been the sole cause of his downfall? Perhaps such thoughts make moral cowards of us all.

Whatever the cause, it is a lamentable fact that, amid an apparent unconcern regarding the open saloon, many of our boys are on the downward road. For this reason the law and order league should have the encouragement of every good citizen so long as it is honestly for the enforcement of law; but if the movement proves to be merely a semi-moral spasm, it will fail, and meet what it merits—popular contempt. Yours,

ROBERT MILLER.

HE DID HIS VERY BEST.

A Nantucket Man Takes a Hand and Spins a Considerable Sea Yarn.

The company was now thoroughly aroused. The emergency called for a really distinguished and original liar, and happily the company possessed one in the venerable Captain D—, who had sailed in all known seas, and in every manner of whaling and merchant craft. On Nantucket or off Island, there was never his rival at a yarn.

"H-m," said he calmly, and waited a few minutes to gather his wits and reflectively. "Yes, I guess it was 45 or so, I was first mate. I remember, the night before, we saw the reflection of the great fire in Nantucket."

"The—reflection—of the—great—fire?"

"Yes, sir, I was in that part of the world, Cap'n," asked one.

THE GIANT PURPLE CRAB.

He Climbs Cocoanut Trees and Crushes the Nuts Against Stones.

In the tropical zones there is seen a very fine specimen of the remarkable large land crab known as the purple crab, or Birgus latro, which is well preserved in a glass jar. This is one of the largest species of land crab known. It is sometimes found from 18 to 24 inches in length, when fully stretched out, and is capable of effecting itself to the length of nearly a foot from the ground, which it readily does if irritated, retreating and exhibiting to the utmost its powers of offense or defense.

It is somewhat allied to the hermit crab, but having the abdomen or tail shorter, yet very large, on the under side of which it carries its eggs in immense quantities. Its under side is soft and membranous its upper surface covered with strong plates, which overlap one another as in lobsters. The first pair of legs have large and powerful pincers, the second and third pairs of legs are terminated by a slender pair, the pair next to these are a little smaller, with small pincers; the four of legs succeed to the abdomen are very small, but terminated by rudimentary pincers.

When teased this crab is so powerful as its first claws and legs are to be able to pick up a stick, and can hold its own weight so as to suspend for over a minute from a stick held by a person stretched almost as fast backward as forward if pressed. It is generally of a yellowish-brown color, its prime being somewhat colored with little blackish projections.

It is never found far from the sea, in which it is said to feed, its claws in order for mastication to pick and crack the nuts on land and gold is generally found in holes dimmer than those of trees, especially of cocoanut trees, which it gives first access to. Its accumulation gives quantities of the finest of the cocoanut kinds as it has long itself supposed for a soft food. As a general thing the time of its visits to these holes during the daytime and cocoanuts out of sight. Its food generally consists of cocoanuts, also to some extent a species of palm known as pandanus odoratissimus and other nuts, which it climbs trees and procures, cutting the cocoanut from the tree with its heavy claws, and after it has cut down two or three it descends and commences to pick the husk from them.

In its manner of dealing with cocoanuts it exhibits a remarkable intelligence. It allows a hole from out at least at the end where nutrition are. It then sets down and turns the cocoanut round which the nut would get out. This is done by exercising the front claws, heavy claw and breaking it sufficiently to allow the nut to come out. It then takes it upon the small claws, which it grasps into the nut with its small pincers, and carries it off to the nut by one of its great pincers and breaks it against a stone.

The prime nuts are found in the cocoanuts and in the more obscure islands of the Indian Ocean, and in the Pacific on the coasts of the South Pacific, and in the Sandwich Islands, which are a few coral groups.—New Hampshire Journal.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY,

Unexcelled in Fertility! A Wealth of Timber! One Hundred Miles of Navigable Coast-Line!

CHARLEVOIX, as the entrepôt and outlet of a region bordering 90 miles of navigable inland coast, possesses elements of commercial importance that only require railroad connection to make it the business center of Northern Michigan. A railroad is assured! Study the map of Charlevoix county, and the relation it bears to Charlevoix harbor. Railroad connection with our lines of water traffic at this point, means concentration and enlargement of trade, transfer of travel and shipping, lines of north-shore and inland steamers, and investment in manufactures. ROME ALMOST IN RUINS.

Seven Persons Killed, 250 Injured, and Historic Edifices Badly Damaged.

A remarkable explosion shook the city of Rome to its foundations, spread the terror and tragedy on all sides, and resulting in seven deaths and more or less serious injuries to the persons. The people rushed affrighted from their homes into the streets. Dense rocket, pyrotechnic fell from the walls, thousands of pieces of glass were broken everywhere, crockery was shattered, furniture was overturned, chimneys crashed down upon the roofs and in some instances toppled over into the streets, and everywhere by, where something like order had been resident, high red caps of the pandemonium reigned. It was discovered that the immense pyrotechnic store at Prime Pastrione, four kilometers distant, containing 25 tons of powder, had exploded. All the houses within a radius of a kilometer of the scene of the explosion are seriously damaged. Sig. Nicotera, Minister of the Interior stated in the Chamber of Deputies that fourteen persons were injured at the time of the explosion and that about ten persons in Rome were slightly hurt. The Minister of War said that more 200 issued powder in the magazine, but that some of the new cap caves, indestructible, stood them. It is surmised from the expressions received from the Italian Consuls that the Italian Consulates were dangerously wrecked, but no efforts have been taken to the different hospitals suffering from wounds or bruises caused by the explosion. King Humbert, who was heartily cheered whenever his presence became known to the panic-stricken citizens, rode his own carriage to convey wounded people to the hospitals.

STRIKERS TEAR UP TRACKS.

Detroit Street Car Lines Paralyzed—Serious Trouble Expected.

At Detroit, Mich., the entire system of the city railway company is paralyzed. Nine hundred men quietly obeyed the order to quit and joined the strikers to prevent the running of cars. Tracks were torn up on three lines and obstructions have been placed on every line. The men of the company had hired to take the places of those ordered out, but when the men arrived at the stables, as many points filled with crowds, not a car left the stables for fear them.

Yellow Fever at New York.

At New York there are three cases of with yellow fever on board the United States and Brazil mail steamship Advance, which arrived from Rio Janeiro. Three others were on ill with the dread disease that they were landed before the vessel reached port. Dr. Skinner, of the quarantine health officer, reports that the crews of their disease has been passed to the shore. Not more than two persons then each spread from the disease. They will be detained at the quarantine. There were no steerage passengers.

No Hope for Ford.

Nothing can now save the neck of murderer Ford, of Ottawa, Ill., who is sentenced to be hanged on May 8. In a letter U. G. Allen, Ford's chief counsel, says that he has given up the fight because he became convinced of Ford's guilt, and that he will not further interfere between Ford and the law. He is apparently resigned to his fate, though carnally his sentence for the spending their own money to take the case to the Supreme Court.

300 Traffic in Women.

A despatch from Zanzibar says that the Congo commissioner at Dolo has imposed an annual tax of ninety traders. The Efforts on the part of the British and Germans to abolish slavery in Zanzibar and on the east African coast are meeting with complete success. The slave trade, however, is no longer carried on, with its horror bodiness, and many of the Arabs have threatened to leave settled down to lawful pursuits.

Sons-in-law Sue Fend.

Miss Elizabeth Shuman was surprised when she received that she has relatives enough to share her fortune of $100,000 for herself and sister. Miss Barbara Shuman died recently at her home in Philadelphia, and it is said her fend, leaving no relatives, made a will in favor of Samuel Sherman.

Believed to Be Jesse James's Son.

Eureka Springs (Ark.) officers arrested a man from the Indian Territory who is said to be John Jesse, son of the notorious Jesse James. The lad is a desperate character and has committed many robberies. He, last being at Van Buren, Ark., only a few weeks ago.

Arkansas River Rises.

At Little Rock, Ark., the Arkansas River is on a great boom. A rise of three feet has taken place and it is still rising. An overflow and much damage to growing crops is feared. The big compress bridge at Dardanelle was washed away.

Battle for Eight Hours.

The 700 members of the New York Stone Cutters' Protective Union struck for the eight-hour rule. The union is composed almost entirely of Italians, who have been receiving $3.50 a day for nine hours. They now demand the same wages for eight hours.

Big Tobacco Failure.

H. P. Thompson & Co., of Winchester, Ky., the largest tobacco buying firm in the State, have failed. The liabilities are placed at $200,000, with only $50,000 known, but much less. The cause of the failure was speculation.

Trade is Dull.

Wallack, Elliott & Co., shoe manufacturers of Hudson, Mich., have suspended a business of $200,000 a year, have shut down on account of dull trade, throwing 250 hands out of employment.

EASTERN OCCURRENCES.

At New York the body of an unknown woman, with her throat cut from ear to ear, was found lying on the sidewalk. The identity of the woman is unknown. The police have under suspicion, who named Baltimore.

Measures of the Hamilton and Belcher families have joined in a petition to the Mayor of New York, asking that the place be designated in that city as a public for the public fountain, for which the will of Robert Ray Hamilton provided. Those who oppose this use of money claiming pecuniary interest in the matter. Their objection is based upon family pride. They are very sensitive for the good name of the families since which Alexander Hamilton and General Philip Schuyler brought and established fame. Such a monument as the will designate would, they believe, perpetuate a name that brought honor to the family.

At Boston, R. T. Vond & Co., clothiers, have assigned. The concern did a large business and the liabilities will be heavy.

Miss Mamie Schannon, aged 16, residing in Pittsburg, Pa., has been discovered a carving knife, and made a desperate assault upon her household, who was lying upon the bed asleep. Before she had time to do damage he had received a test gash on the left side of her head from the sharp edge of the blade, and a deep cut in the throat. Sullivan finally took the knife away from her wife and ran to the door to call police. Mrs. Sullivan had to make the chase in order to prevent the girl from cutting her throat. Mr. Sullivan has been married eighteen months. Miss Mamie Schannon, who, aged 16, has been employed at the Pittsburg Bessemer mills for two years and will discharge the Superior Court.

Mrs. Mary Warner, which, aged 60, has been convicted at Hartford, Conn., of murder in the second degree in taking the poisonous life-giving of her husband, Samuel Smith was sentenced by New Haven's superior Court to life imprisonment.

Wrecked Train Robbed.

While Frank V. Jackson with his wife and child were crossing a bridge in Sumner N. H. the bridge broke in and plunged into the Androscoggin river. Jackson was drowned.

WESTERN HAPPENINGS.

A daughter was born to the Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, of Indianapolis, Ind., last week. The mother and child are doing well.

At Leadon, a reception was given by the citizens of Leadon to Dr. Wilson, a physician, of Glamorganshire, who is probably the most celebrated man in the medical profession in England, if not in Europe. He was born in Suffolk 72 years ago, and the fact is corroborated by the presence of his name upon the list of members of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1860, when he was but 18 years old. Notwithstanding his advanced age he is now in the full possession of his faculties and attends to his professional duties with a regularity and vigor than characterizes many a much younger man.

The British expedition advancing on Monompe reported that the Monompes had cleared their huts. They have found several laughing corpses on the line of march, supposed to be those of people who tried to escape from the Monompes.

FRESH AND NEWSY.

E. B. Dix & Co's weekly review of trade says:

While rainy weather there is rather less complaint of the backward season, and while it is far from the ordinary for the season generally regarded as extraordinary, crop prospects continue excellent, and the general business situation is so satisfactory that no material change is needed, and the chief interest after improvement in the industrial operations, which has led to some of trade continues nearly as large to the previous week, and there is even more decrease in quantities of imported merchandise than in the total of business. The failures for the week were 201 in the United States, which was nearly 18 per cent. less than the number last week, and

FROM GULF TO COAST.

MAGNIFICENT RECEPTIONS TO THE PRESIDENT.

With Fleating of Cannon, Blaze of Bonfires, and Strength Brass Bands Honors, the Presidential Party is Satisfying Round the Gulfs.

Uncle Sam, in the person of President Harrison, has been visiting a Southern Gulf cities for a few days. On Tuesday the Presidential party reached Mobile, Ala., and the people of that city showed how they knew how to welcome a President. The school children, three thousand strong, at Spring Hill, Mobile, had to be dismissed and the people crowded from the stage of the train in the Union depot. The streets of the depot were draped with the national colors, and would be overgrown about the depot with the street were the words, "Welcome to President Harrison." The reception committee numbered fifty, and was composed of leading citizens and representative colored men.

The party left Mobile at 10 o'clock and, returning, were driven through the principal streets. The business houses were handsomely decorated, flags and bunting floating from every window. President Harrison was introduced by Hon. H. Clay Evans, and was greeted with deafening cheers. The President made a speech of an hour. He was followed by Hon. Jeff. Chandler, who made a reception upon the stand followed, a speech of an hour. The party had to leave with the Portuguese, and have complimented the Portuguese, and have complimented the Portuguese officers in his fellow, and the Portuguese officers in his fellow, and the Portuguese officers in his fellow, and John Kopf has the lumber on the ground for a new residence.

Moses Cooper loaded two vessels the past week at Oyster Bay.

Cooper & Burgess have the timber on the ground for the erection of the shingle mill at Oyster Bay.

Forest fires have been raging for several days.

Anson Stauffer's residence near Carpenter was burned last Thursday. The wind blew a cinder from a burning fallow several rods distant, fired the house. The family being absent at the time none of the household goods were saved but a sewing machine.

On last Thursday while Henry Hart and family were absent from house, the wind blew cinders from a burning fallow forty rods distant, that set fire to a stump in the yard near the barn, and burned some manure heaps in the garden. It was providential that the buildings escaped.

Posts worth knowing in regard to construction of boilers so as to derive the most benefit of fuel, as well as the least horse-power, out of the same size of boiler; I have taken the liberty, by reason of my experience, to insert some of the arguments that are advanced regarding this matter, 1st. To get in the proper number of tubes, at the same time retaining a natural draft, free of choking, and with no gush of fire from the fire hold and yet keep a good body of water on material. 2d. By equalizing the strays in the boiler so as not to leave a weak spot in boiler.

Parties contemplating a first class boiler will find it for their advantage to call or write for particulars. Prompt attention given, and satisfaction guaranteed, as I make my own plans and specifications according to government requirements.

Parties will note that I have ample facilities for building of boiler plates, rivets, and tubes of all sizes, sheet iron and steel, iron, brass, asphaltum varnish, genuine magnolia and Dodson tubular metal, steam fittings, boilers and engines.

Here is a pipe for our prohibition friends to smoke. On May 5th the only saloon in town went out of business, on the grounds, we are informed, it did not pay, as it cost too much for a $500 license. We have now a prohibition town, but if the license were three, two or one hundred dollars we would support the saloon. The only inference we can deduce from this is that high license curtails the liquor traffic. It might be in order to note that this is a border town with four large mills in and contiguous to us.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mr. Walker McCool, aged 69 years departed this life on Tuesday morning last at 5:30 o'clock. The funeral was held from the M. E. Church, of which he was a member, on Tuesday afternoon. Deceased had been a resident here years ago but, for a time lived in Nebraska and returned about nine years since and remained until his death. He has been unwell for a long time but his last sickness has been during the past four weeks. He had no relatives in this section that are known of and was unmarried.

Supervisor A. C. Bowman, of Petoskey, met with a fearful death on Friday. Mr. Bowman was at the factory taking the assessment. He was going around the yard talking with Superintendent Hair, and at the time of the accident had stepped between two flat cars to speak to Mr. Hair, who was on the side. The Harlow Spring train was switching some cars upon the siding, and some cars were dropped down to couple upon the cars where Mr. Bowman and Mr. Hair were standing. They did not notice their approach until the cars came together. Mr. Hair was standing one side and escaped injury, but Mr. Bowman was caught between the "dead woods" and terribly crushed. He was taken to his home, and died in less than two hours. Mr. Bowman was about 35 years of age, and was one of the most popular men of Petoskey. He was a prominent officer of Ivanhoe Commandery, K. T., and a Tenderloiter of Durand Lodge, F. & A. M. His funeral Monday was Masonic and Knight Templar honors.

"I am writing this on the rail of the D. A. Wells. She will reel shortly. Kiss the children and collect my life insurance. Mrs. Morgan Montressor, Grand Pacific Hotel, Chicago." The boat mentioned was a schooner which foundered off the Chicago harbor several years ago and her crew of nine men were lost.

Lake Fishing Prospects.

The president of the Board of Fish Commissioners was recently interviewed by a Grand Rapids scribe, and expressed himself as follows:

"The results in the case of the whitefish deposit in the great lakes are not so apparent to the general public," said Dr. Parker, "but they are none the less real. Lake Erie, which a few years ago furnished more than one-half the whitefish in Buffalo, now has immense and productive fisheries off Erie and Dunkirk. Davis & Co. and other large firms have removed their fisheries down there from Lake Superior, Lake St. Clair, which was nearly depleted up to within a few years, now produces large catches of whitefish of a uniform size and variety, showing that they are the results of the periodical deposits of the commission.

"At the foot of Lake Michigan, in the vicinity of Manitou, where the great Comstock fisheries are situated, they report taking an increased number, and one circumstance, which was a matter of surprise to the fishermen until explained, is that large catches are made of a different kind of whitefish than they have been accustomed to—not a specific difference, but certainly a variety difference. This was easily explained by a member of the commission upon sight. They were Lake Erie whitefish, the variety which the commission had deposited, and which could have got there in no other way, showing conclusively the result of the work.

"These results, growing more and more apparent, the success of the hatcheries in the propagation and preservation of our lake varieties of fish food, and the evident interest taken in the subject by the general public and by our legislators, combine to promise a continual and increasing benefit from the indefatigable and earnest work of the board."

—The first dredge that came to Charlevoix, eighteen years ago, stirred up quite a ripple of excitement; the one that came Monday was scarcely noticed, and made Dr. Crutter hot as blazes because it pulled out the telephone cable.

—The Mason & Berdan opening last week made the girls smile, and they are smiling yet. Their beautiful new front was a picture from the street, and the tasteful decorations were aesthetic to a degree. Flowers and potted plants abounded and the dollars rolled in galore. Sunshine makers were fairly made to shine amid white and gold and shingling lists. Overflowing demand taste, thrift and courtesy. A.ooo an opening.

—The Chicago and West Michigan Railway Company have placed on sale pocket packs, of excellent quality at the low price of 15 cents per pack. On the back is a map of the lower peninsula and a diagram of the railroad. The faces of the cards contain, besides the usual kings, queens, knaves, etc., much useful information, as to distances between the principal cities on the line, rates on the summer resorts, rates for the parlor and sleeping cars etc.

—Miss Ella Carr had a narrow escape from serious injury, if not death last Friday afternoon. She was out driving with her brother's horse and buggy, and when turning into Main street from Bridge street, one side of the shafts became detached, and striking the horse frightened him into a runaway. It looked serious to the bystanders as the rig reached the Congregational church; but the strain was relieved when, after the buggy was thrown forward up, Miss Carr righted herself up with only a fearful fright.

—Cadillac Express: Notwithstanding the fact that the round smoke-house may have come from Charlevoix, we are prepared to accept the suggestion that it emanates from the extreme frigidity radiating from Petoskey and having its source in the coolness existing between Petoskey newspaper men. Indeed, it appears to us that distance can be no refuge, as we are assured that there is nothing cool about that residence. It is red-hot, pleasantly permeating, and penetratingly hot. That's the usual temperature of newspaper coolness.

—Never in the history of Charlevoix have forest fires raged as fiercely as during the past week. The woods and swamps south have been a mass of smoldering flame, and on our streets the smoke has been so dense as to be positively painful to the eyes, while the air has been full of ashes and small cinders. Fortunately, considerable anxiety was felt here, and President Sutters and Chief Nicholls went out and fought the fire herding water out in the city sprinkler and in barrels. Farmers generally have had a hard time of it, and many fences, stacks of hay and some barns have been destroyed.

—We are surprised, The Charlevoix editor of the Petoskey Democrat, pronounce evidently conscious liberal in our remarks last week concerning the bonds question. It would seem that the utterances of the editor of the only of record date, but during the back is a map of the lower peninsula and a diagram of the railroad. The faces of the cards contain, besides the usual kings, queens, knaves, etc., much useful information, as to distances between the principal cities on the line, rates on the summer resorts, rates for the parlor and sleeping cars etc.

—President Sutters starts out his administration with energy and public spirit. In the work of enforcing the laws and ordinances he should have the support of every citizen.

—It would be the object of Charlevoix business men who have the good of the place at heart, to establish here a ready, reliable, and all-the-year-round market for the farmer. This is the chief requisite, and the all important essential in the work of putting life and vitality into the blood and muscle of Charlevoix, give the farmers a good market, and we will have a good town.

—In arranging the Adoptive-Masonic Order of the Eastern Star, the founder looked for five characters who should perfectly exemplify five forms of heroic virtues. The first four were to be in analogy with the daughter, widow, wife and sister of Moses Masons. The fifth was found, in the well-known Catholic legend of Elwein, one of the most affecting narratives of early times. There are therefore five heroines of the order—Adah, Jephtha's daughter, because she freely sacrificed her life to save her father's honor; Ruth, because she willingly left home and friends to dwell with the people of God; Esther, because she was prepared to render up her crown, and even life itself, to save her people from destruction; Martha, because of her undeviating faith in the merits of her Redeemer; Electa, because she preferred to suffer death rather than deny her religious belief.

—H. C. Rose of Pensaukee, was the guest of Amos Fox Saturday. To the common run of readers the above announcement will be commonplace enough, but the meeting of these two old soldiers was suggestive to the writer of a volume of interesting reminiscences, if the old men could be induced to talk. We doubt if there are two more anywhere who spent the number of years in Atlantic Business association that "Hi" and "Amo" did. Going to California in 1849, they dug gold together in those exciting days; slept in the same tent, stored their pieces of land in Northport together, and at Northport set in business together for many years were partners. All these years they never kept a book between them, never had a quarrel, and when they separated the settlement was made in an hour, without the mark of a pen. When all the property had been divided but one piece of land in Northport, Mr. Rose proposed that they should play a game of "seven up" to see who should take it. Mr. Fox declined the proposition because, as he declared, he could beat Rose in the game, and he didn't want the property.

—Mr. Lemuel Ching, of Harbor springs, is a badly battered up Indian and Charlie Tolmasch and Jackson Pamosaw, two notable Indian fingers are in the soup. Chingwa worked all winter at Ironton and on Saturday was in Charlevoix, on his way home with every apparent attribute of a good Indian," and $44 in his pocket. In the afternoon he fell in with this precious pair of Hayes ugsalins, and they induced him to accompany them home for the night. About two mins out of town they fell upon the Harbor Springs buck and after beating his head unmercifully, relieved him of his money and left him beside the road. The poor Indian managed to reach Charlevoix and was taken to Dr. LeFleur, who dressed his wounds. Sunday morning Deputy Sheriff Sawyer, accompanied by Thos. Cook, sr., went to Hayes and found the two savages at the Susan Lake church shedding service. They were brought down to the Ferguson House, free to face with their victim, who identified both. The money in one of one was found $22, but the other possessed nothing and would say nothing. Pending the examination of the first, however, Max Labensky did good service. Going down stairs he returned with a rope. Whitney and Sawyer and Marshal McLeod were in an adjoining room with No 1, to handle No. 2 into another room and in deep and guttural German accent informed him in most profane language of the money or die there. After manipulating the fence about 25 minutes he finally produced the balance of the money or die there. After manipulating the fence about 25 minutes he finally produced the balance of the money, and he then dropped it behind a stump at the Indian church when arrested. The money found and taken by the officials to the place designated and the money found. Both were then locked up. Monday they were examined in Justice Court, bound over on a charge of highway robbery, and are backed for trial in Circuit Court this week. Walker is a bad Indian, and is said to have killed one of his tribe in Emmet county some time ago. Later—In the Circuit Court yesterday afternoon, the defendants plead guilty, and were sentenced to five years in the Marquette prison.

WEEKLY—OFFICIAL EDITION
CHARLEVOIX, MAY 15, 1891.

St. Joseph and Benton Harbor, consolidated, has been given the name of port Michigan.

Out of 1931 policemen in Chicago, 1500 are Bohemian. English cockneys will have to walk straight at the World's Fair.

McKinley was right when he said the tariff would remain (practically) as it is for the next ten years. The free trade crusade has spent its force and the reaction is coming.

Frost has injured the buds and blossoms of fruit to a considerable extent, but the country is so broad that a failure of fruit in one section is compensated for by the yield in another.

The Toledo Bee declares "The Michigan plan is a winner for the Democrats in 1892." And that is all there is to the foul claim of bringing the election of a Democrat nearer to the people.

In view of the evils which they brought upon the State by their negligence last fall, it is not likely that the sixty-six same Republicans will repeat the experiment again very soon. They will come out in swarms next year.

Through the dangerous, disagreeable rains of Oregon and Washington, President Harrison continues his journey and demonstration of well nigh almost unparalleled. The best of it is that he is able to return his thanks, and voice his sentiments without constant reference to an encyclopedia.

If any set of the squirmiest logic latitude has done more than another to insure Republican success at the next election, that set is the reflexive Mills bill. In defense of that measure not one Democratic paper in the state can yet been also to bring a vital argument against that measure an abundance of valid arguments have been adduced, and more will be forthcoming in due time.

The Grand Rapids Democrat says that Hon. John S. Newberry, of Mt. Clemens is the richest member of the Present congress. Mr. Mitchell is a Democratic one. And yet in the coming campaign we shall hear again the old howling against the Republican party because of the fact that some rich men are members of it. The wealthiest men in the country are not Republicans, nor are there more than of wealth in the Republican than in the Democratic party, in the country at large, perhaps. But there is supposed to be a great deal more of it in the Republican party than in the Democratic party, and it is usually continued throughout the campaign.

Five hundred Knights Templar, of Albany, N. Y., are expected to arrive here in the latter part of July on a tour through Europe. They have applied to Minister Lincoln to obtain from the British government permission to wear their regalia while in England. Mr. Matthews, the home secretary, has been consulted on the subject and has intimated that it is inconsistent to make an exception in the case of the Knights. They have a little more right than the right to wear their uniforms and arms and playing the deuce of the national flag at Chicago, which they have chartered for the voyage, although she sails under the British flag. To this probably no objection will be offered. Application has been made to the government of the countries on the continent where the knights intend to visit. If that they may be allowed to march through the cities armed and in full regalia, bearing their banners and executing their maneuvers.

The Detroit Free Press, in discussing the Minor electoral act, makes two assumptions which are as much at variance with the truth as the Minor act is with equity. It assumes that the Democrats may carry Michigan in 1892, and that the Republican party, in that contingency, would be glad of the passage of the Minor act. Neither supposition is tenable. Michigan has never gone Democratic in a presidential year since the Republican party was organized, and in 1892 there will be no exception to the rule. But Republicans would not, for the Minor plan of electing presidential electors, even if the state should give a Democratic majority. They both claim and concede the right of a majority or plurality of the voters of the state to determine whether the votes of the state shall be given for the Democratic or the Republican candidate. If the Minor plan were adopted in all the states of the Union, its feasibility and fairness would at least be debatable. But the singling out of a Republican state for putting the plan into operation is simply a contemptable party trick, unworthy even of the party tricksters who planned it and have enacted it into law.

A DEFINITION OF WEALTH.
Something New for Political Economists to Consider.

In George Gunton's new book, "Principles of Social Economy," it is said that definitions of the term "wealth" in the works of economists are most vacuous and conflicting. A definition, then, that shall be full, clear and comprehensive, is evidently much to be desired.

The term "wealth" seems to have been formed by a combination of the two old Saxon words, "weal" and "things," and the process may have been like this: Weal things, weal-things, wealth (pronounced as two syllables with "things" dropped), and finally wealth, as we now have it. But, however formed, that the term wealth is identical in meaning with weal-things, there can be no doubt. By examining these two words, therefore, ascertaining their meanings and connecting them, if the work be well done, the exact and complete meaning of the word wealth will appear.

The word "thing" springs from an old Saxon root which signifies "to be heavy." But what is heavy is of material substance and is an object of sense. A thing, then, is any material object cognizable by the senses. But it is especially used of what is without life, though in common speech all living beings, when mere are spoken of as things, and even man himself when regarded as belonging to the animal kingdom, as in the phrase, "all sorts and conditions of things." But, strictly speaking, man is not accounted a thing, because he is a moral person, and this higher element of personality raises him above the sphere of things.

Weal has the same root as wal. To be well—that is to be in a state that is wholesome to the health, and that is to be in the state of fullest, most active and most unimpaired life. This is the keynote word of the whole matter—life. To be well is to be in a state that is well—is to be in the fullest degree alive.

The things that make for weal are the things which make for life—for that is to be alive that is again for life. The things which make for weal, that is for life, came to human speech in the plural weal-things, and this compound word was contracted into wealth. By these steps the current and complete definition of our term is brought plainly into view.

Wealth is one, or more, or the sum of the things which make for life.

And here it passes, it may be said that life, and especially life as found in man, is the keystone stard of all that is contained in what men have been wont to call political economy.

Now take this definition as a measuring staff in the hand and go abroad through the world and measure off the array of things therein. All things which make for life are weal things—wealth. Wheat, corn, grass, fruits, vegetables, food things of every sort, are wealth. So are all implements to provide them. So are clothing, fuel and all implements to provide them. So are all things to help about them, as in transportation and exchange.

But human life has grades, and those things which feed it in the higher grades are also wealth—as works of art, to illustrate the highest, spiritual side of human life, or hospitals to illustrate its lowest.

But are muskets and cannon and all the ammunition of war, wealth? In so far as they are needful to help some life-preserving well against destruction by other life, they are wealth to the lives they preserve; but they are destroyers of life to those whom they kill. In preserving alive those whom they defend. But to the whole sum of human life on the earth they are a monstrous evil, to be accepted from the earth as the heart of human kind is ready to accept its surplus to kill. In a true economic sense muskets and cannon are not wealth, but destroyers of wealth.

The Liquor Law.

At the request of prominent citizens we print the following extract from the liquor law, relating to sales:

Sec. 5281. Any person or persons who shall sell to any person or persons of intemperate habits, or any person or persons who shall sell to any person or persons in the habit of getting intoxicated, liquors any liquors or wines, or any intoxicating drink, or any person or persons who shall sell to any person who is in the habit of drinking to the injury of his family, or any person who shall sell to any person who is in the habit of drinking to the injury of his family, or any person who shall sell to any person who is in the habit of drinking to the injury of his family, or any person

But Republicans would not favor the Minor plan of disarming power-dential electors, even if the state should give a Democratic majority. They both claim and concede the right of a majority or plurality of the voters of the state to determine whether the votes of the state shall be given for the Democratic or the Republican candidate. If the Minor plan were adopted in all the states of the Union, its feasibility and fairness would at least be debatable. But the singling out of a Republican state for the Tillman, the feasibility and fairness would at least be debatable. But the singling out of a Republican state for the Tillman, the feasibility and fairness is simply a contemptable party trick, unworthy even of the petty tricksters who planned it and have enacted it into law.

A DEFINITION OF WEALTH.

Something New for Political Economists to Consider.

In George Gunton's late book, "Principles of Social Economics," is to said that definitions of the term "wealth" in the works of economists are many, various and conflicting. A definition, then, that shall be full, clear and complete, is evidently much to be desired.

The term "wealth" seems to have been formed by a combination of the two old Saxon words, "weal" and "things," and the process may have been like this: What things, wealthings, wealth (pronounced as two syllables with 'thgs' dropped), and finally wealth, as we now have it. But, however formed, that the term wealth is identical in meaning with weal-things, there can be no doubt. By examining these two words, therefore, ascertaining their meanings and combining them, if the work be well done, the exact and complete meaning of the word wealth will appear.

The word "thing" springs from an old Saxon root which signifies "to be heavy." But what is heavy is of material substance and is an object of sense. A thing, then, is any material object cognizable by the senses. But it is especially used of what is without life, though in common speech it includes living beings below man are spoken of as things, and even man himself when thought of as belonging to the animal kingdom, as in the phrase, "all animals and inanimate things." But, strictly speaking, man is not accounted a thing because he is a moral person, and this higher element of personality raises him above the sphere of things.

Weal is the same root as wealth. In its well-that is, to be in a state that is well—is to be in health, and that is to be in the state of bliss, most happy and most unimpaired of. This is the highest welfare to be obtained in this life. The end of it is to be happy. Weal is what is to be aimed at, the blessedness of life, the most desirable good.

The things that make for weal are the things which make for endowment, that is to be alive that is great for life. The things which cause for weal, that is for life, cause in human speech to be called weal-things, and this compound word was contracted into wealth. By these steps the correct and complete definition of wealth term is brought plainly into view.

Wealth is one, or more, or the sum of the things which make for life.

And here, in passing, it may be said that life, and especially life as found in man, is the keynote word of all that is contained in what men have been wont to call "political economy."

Now take this definition as a measuring staff in the hand and go abroad through the world and measure of the array of things therein. All things which are for life are weal things—wealth. Wheat, corn, grass, fruits, root crops, food things of every sort, are wealth. So are all implements to provide them. So are clothing, fuel and all implements to provide these. So are all things to help about them as in transportation and exchange.

But human life has grades. All those things which feed it in its higher grades are also wealth—as works of art, illustrative the higher, spiritual side of human life, as hospitals to illustrate its opposite.

But are markets and exchange, and all the ponderous of war, wealth? In so far as they are needful to help some life preserve itself against destruction by other life they are wealth in so fives they preserve; but they are death, which is "life" to those whom they kill in preserving alive those whom they defend. But to the whole sum of human life on the earth they are a monstrous evil, to be swept off from the earth as the heart of human kind is healed of its impulses to rob and kill. In a true, economic sense nothing that is made for killing men is wealth, but only what is made to make for life for all.

But, finally, are are human faculties, powers, actions, virtues and the like wealth? Yes they are—and under this word. There must be another word for them, if we would escape confusion of mind, and utter clear thought in reviewing them.

Daily the material things which make for life are wealth, and all those things that ward off wounds.

Courage of Tigers and Lions.

The Bengal tiger has more courage than the lion, according to a shooter, who says that the latter was found to be more of a coward than the former. He placed a young bullock in the respective cages and fired the fuses. As soon as the fuses began to burn they attracted the attention of both animals, but in a widely different manner. The lion drew into a corner and watched the proceedings with a distrustful and uneasy eye. The tiger, on the contrary, advanced to the burning fuse with a firm step and unflinching gaze. On reaching the cracker he took his paw and began to roll it over the floor, and when it exploded beneath his very nose he did not flinch, but continued his examination until perfectly satisfied. The lion betrayed great fear when he heard the report of the explosion and for quite a time could not be coaxed out of his den.

The Best Family Dog.

I asked Problem Terry of the Westminster Kennel club one day during the dog show what kind of a dog he would advise me, as a family man, to get for my family. I told him I would not afford a $75 toy spaniel for a plaything nor an $80 St. Bernard to scare tramps. "Well," he said, "if you lived in one-horse town I would say get the best kind, buy a collie. I have had fifty or sixty different kinds of dogs, and have nearly that number now. My experience compels me to commend the collie as I have. He is bright, of fine disposition, and the greatest of dogs in his association with children." The collie is known to many as the shepherd dog.—N. Y. Continent.

Stopping a Train to Kiss Her Boy.

A train in Georgia was nearly held up by a lone woman. It had got almost 200 yards from a station, when a negro woman was seen running frantically after it. The conductor was just pulling the bell, and the train came to a stop. A colored trainman stood on the steps and reached his hand out to help the woman on. But she ran on by, and a negro boy hung himself out of the window and kissed her. The conductor was naturally a little wrathy, and told her so. She told him that her boy was going off, and they didn't give her time to tell him good-by, and she had to do it if she would have to follow the train ten miles.

It Pays to Buy the BEST BOATS!
The large number of boats I have built for twenty-five years past, which have been sold on my reputation, I believe, are the best evidence that I can produce that my boats are the best that are built.
I will guarantee the boat supplied, under ordinary care and handling, to be as good in every respect as any boat built by any other builder, and to last as long, and I will prove it if you will give me a chance to do so.
I am now prepared to build boats for the season of 1891, and would be pleased to receive orders for any kind of a boat, from a canoe to a 40 foot yacht. Also, I am prepared to do all kinds of repairing, painting and varnishing, and will do it as cheap as any one who does not use my boats as a sample. Yours respectfully,

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER VIII.

Chub talked the most. She seemed to regain her spirits among them with the people who prized the companionship of Jim Blake.

"Was this the dinner—sure as he always was Mr. Bigger?"

"Just the same, sweetie, he was a lib Hunter. Naturally. Smart, too, how it was Bigger—sure."

"Why, how are you, sweetie? Ain't nowadays so much as I heard."

Hazel Dickson looked mischievously at her, as she spoke, from the corner of the sitting room.

"Why, I was over this fall myself, Hazel, and I thought you was there."

"Why, I was, sure enough, Chub, but I was only a little while, you know, and I was so busy with the folks, I didn't see you at all."

"Well, I was, sure, Hazel, and I was so busy with the folks, I didn't see you at all."

"Well, I guess we both were not doing much else, Chub."

"Sure, Hazel, I guess we were."

"Well, Chub, I guess we were, too."

"Sure, Hazel, I guess we were, too

THE SAILORS.

Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

The dredge will leave us 4½ feet of water between Lake Michigan to Pine Lake.

The "mattresses" for which brush was put on last winter, are to be used in protecting both channels.

The government dredging plant now working here, including the tug Williams, represents an outlay of $25,000.

At Beauvais' boat yard, the yacht Chiquita, owned by J. M. Hogart, of Grand Rapids, is receiving a thorough rebuild.

The steamhargе White Star went ashore Monday night in the smoke, three miles north of Gill's Pier. She worked herself off the next morning.

The steamers City of Grand Rapids and Gazelle will run in connection with the C. & W. M. between Traverse City and Mackinac this season.

N. Fred Avery, of Grand Rapids, has bought the Stockbridge yacht Margaret. Mr. Avery is here to-day arranging to have her hauled out and and fixed up.

Albert E. Mason and Edgar Gebo have bought the schooner Sea Gem from Oscar Smith. Capt. Edgar Gebo will walk the quarter deck.

The schooner Coral, in trying to make this harbor in the southwest gale Friday, struck the south pier, carrying away her bobstays and starting some of her deck plank.

The little steam-yacht Kittie, bought by Joseph Heatwole, is on her way here from Port Huron, and is at Alpena to-day. She is 32 feet long, and is licensed to carry 12 passengers.

This comes under the marine head: Carpenter's Florida yacht, with Capt. Egbert Carpenter in command, took first prize at an Indian River regatta recently. The versatility of that man Carpenter is something surprising.

The particulars of the schooner Raber's bad luck near Gill's Pier last week were given in this column. After hanging on several days and slowly dragging, the wind went down, and Capt. Clark replaced his rudder, made sail and worked himself off, reaching here Wednesday noon very little the worse for wear. The Raber left yesterday with a full cargo.

This year the steamer Petoskey will have a very sharp competitor for the Chicago business in the fine steamer Soo City. She is a fast boat, and at present stops at the piers, as she draws over 12 feet. Within two weeks, however, she will be inside. She is nearly new, having been on two two seasons. Late June 15th the Soo City will make the same weekly run as the Charlevoix and Lawrence, after that date she will make two round trips each week between Charlevoix and Mackinac. Her time from Charlevoix to Chicago will be 36 hours, and from Chicago to Petoskey 24 hours.

Vessel men say they can make as much tied up to the dock as they can running. Capt. Isaell of the large schooner of that name, now in port, remarked Monday: "I brought coal from Sandusky to Green Bay for 90 cents per ton, and take back Pine Lake lumber at $5, paying sailors $2 per day. Can you figure out anything for the vessel?" Vessels carry lumber from here to Chicago for $1.75, and rise for six cents seven cents. One captain remarked yesterday: "When a trim schooner like the A. J. Dewey can be bought for $15 in getting pretty bad for vessel owners. But freights will come up some in a few weeks."

Undine.

The Green took her second load of lumber from Undine Friday.

Rinaldo Crane is adding a kitchen to his house.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Hamlin visited friends in Cordon Sunday.

Miss Lu. Jenkins, of Bear Lake, visited her sister Mrs R. Cram last week.

Pa-ra-ge-sick, an Indian, died Saturday.

Mr. Wilbur was around trying to organize a Sunday school in Dist. No. 3 Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ransome Cram visited Mrs. Hamlin, of Hayes, Sunday.

Railroad Minutes.

J. W. Harris, a C. & W. M. Engineer, with two assistants, have established a "residency" here to prepare a section of the line for the work of the contractors. The extent of Mr. Harris' work is three miles south and seven miles north of this place. Their work at present is to re-locate and correct the line, and, that done, they will begin cross-sectioning for the graders. Mr. Harris expects to be here all summer.

Grand Rapids Democrat. I. H. Lane & Co., of Coldwater, will build the Chicago & West Michigan extension from Traverse City to Charlevoix and Petoskey. The contract was awarded this week. The passenger Herald about 1 o'clock last Tuesday. Some surprise was manifested among railroad men, the general impression being that the McDonald Bros. would get it. Mr. Heald said yesterday to a reporter of the Democrat: "McLane & Co. got the contract because they were the lowest bidders and are entirely responsible. I am glad to give it to them and keep it from going out of the state. I would liked to have given it to McDonald Bros. of this city, but they were not low enough. The contract was awarded on its merits. The contractors have until June 1st, 1892, in which to complete the work and are not required to build any portion of it in preference to another. They are expected to finish it as soon as they can. It depends somewhat on the weather and the condition of labor. Bad weather and sticken may delay matters. The road is not decided upon. I cannot tell you the contract price. The bids are made for so much a cable, yard for the excavation, and we never can tell what that amounts to until the job has been completed and measured. The bids give evidence of careful consideration."

Death of Alexander Ross, of Hayes.

After months of intense suffering with the most malignant form of cancer, Alexander Ross, of Hayes township, passed from this life on Sunday evening last.

Mr. Ross was born at Embo, Scotland, Oct. 6, 1825, making him 65 years and seven months old at the time of his death. He left his native Scotland when six years of age, coming to Eaden, Canada. In 1844 he was married to Miss Frances Gordon, who now survives him. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where up to 1871, he was a master bridge-builder. In the latter year he removed with his family to Hayes, township, where he continued to reside up to the time of his death, exactly 19 years to a day. He was the father of nine children, eight of whom are living.

Mr. Ross was a type of the "brawny Scott." Blunt, outspoken, but always frank and honest, he had the respect of all, and died as he lived, firm in the Christian faith.

The funeral occurred at the Ross home yesterday, Rev. Mr. McCartney officiating, and was largely attended.

Norwood Notes.

Ben Pearl is building a barber shop.

Thos. Muirhead was in town last week on a visit to his father.

Herman Hintzpeter arrived from Chicago on the City of Charlevoix and will make his headquarters with Charlie Ferguson for the next two weeks.

J. A. Clements, the blacksmith, with his family, arrived from Traverse City last week, and will move into the new house built by G. V. Nash.

Clint. Stafford had the misfortune to break one of his horses' legs last week, by the animal throwing himself. An effort will be made to save him by the swinging process.

G. V. Nash has been in Grand Rapids the past week buying furniture.

The schooner Starke, loaded with slabs and wood, left for Milwaukee Monday.

Ed. Stafford, the past week, has been opening up a new street on the Meech addition, north of town. Looks like a railroad sure now.

The band boys want uniforms this spring very badly. Don't be surprised if some one is around to see you and ask for a little help.

The boys at the Ferguson cottage left on a fishing trip down the Intermediate lakes Tuesday.

Egg peddlers and appletree carts are now on the wing.

Ice Shores died Tuesday night at eight o'clock after an illness of just a week. He was a bright little fellow, aged seven years and will be much missed by his playmates.

The Ladies Aid Society meets with Mrs. Alson Wood this week, and the W. C. T. U. with Mrs. Wm. Cowen.

Mr. S. Gagnon, of Cheboygan, has leased the A. E. Upright house on the south terrace for a term of four years, and will open it up as a first-class summer hotel, under the name of the "New Charlevoix." The house is splendidly adapted to the purpose, and will make an attractive place for summer boarders. Mr. Gagnon has an established reputation as a caterer. For 25 years he has been either a steward on lake steamers or manager of a hotel. Old settlers will remember him as the steward and half-owner of the boy steamer Ella Burtess, twenty three years ago. Mr Gagnon will fit up the "New Charlevoix" in good style.

On Thursday morning just before six, while cutting a large elm, the arbor of the sun gave way to White & Co.'s big mill, causing a shut-down for two days.

A. J. Hall, of Pine Lake Home farm, and one of the earliest settlers, is suffering with an illness from which he will not be likely to recover.

White & Co. loaded the following vessels during the past week: Elgin, 300,000 to Chicago; J. V. Taylor, 300,000 to Chicago; H. C. Potter, 250,000 to Tonawanda; Evening Star, 240,000 to Sheboygan; A. J. Dewey, 300,000 to Chicago.

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XI.

ANOTHER AFFRONTING.

"Well," said Tom Biggers, "this is the gayest shindig I ever saw."

"I can't understand it," said Hank Dawson, sadly.

Chub spoke cheerily. It was wonderful the place Chub Dawson displayed. Nothing could dash her bright spirits. Although quite all Sixty-eighth hours had passed since she had seen her betrothed—he had not her as a sweetheart the morning of the day set for their wedding—although everybody gave Dan Rawlt up for dead, or worse than dead if living, chiefly owing to him, yet belief in his reincarnation lay, was not lessened an iota.

"Dad—we're all wrong. Maybe it isn't Will at all—I think. Maybe some thing else has happened to Dan. The Monks need a lot of money, I'm sure, I believe Sunday she'd know just now any more than the Sun, Sunny, Sunny, Sunny."

"Dan's mighty fellow, sure, Chub, only for failing. What I guess you know what you say, but I can't believe that this bound to be let go, and join the gang of outlaws. Dan's belongs in, and we got to go on them, friend of Dan's, leave it alone."

"That's all dad."

"I'm sure, Chub. You can go, Sunny, go, go, go."

"The bad the strangest drunk, dad. I know where Dan is now."

"Where, Chub?"

"Hick's—he's held last somewhere. Then Monks's prison, can't get in by the lock—mind, that's all, or seem away now, as I made this time of times to get over. Dad, if you don't let know where the grand is, the Monks will have a place for trouble."

"I will, you. Be sure I'll let you know."

The next moment Sunny hurried off to the darkness.

"I'm sure sorry I didn't let the dog follow time," said Tom Biggers.

"A bargain's a bargain," said Chub.

"Not with that dog," said Tom Biggers. "He wouldn't follow only one of them—but if he rope was around his neck, and I'm sure he wouldn't."

"Where Hank Dawson, sweetheart, was the first sign of chance in his mood. His demeanor has changed."

"Cool! Did any one ever see such a coward as that man Silas?"

"I don't think he is a bit worse than the Monks, dad. Did any one ever know them to show light unless there were two or three to back up their courage?"

As nobody had, there was no answer to be said on that point.

"Listen," said Tom Biggers. "That's him breaking his way to the door."

"I'm not so sure about that," said Chub, as the lighter-footed as ever. "Don't that sound some to come from behind, instead of door?"

"It does, Chub."

"Let's go to see on the road quick as we can."

They were already in their saddles again; Hank Dawson had held the prize in his mind; he was nearly at home.

"Throw it down, dad," said Chub. "Maybe best to be quiet—sure we hasty I suspect as. Well hurry up on them."

As they rode back to the road it was very quiet; a hush was upon nature. The sounds they heard did not come from the direction of the road. Sparks said the same to all.

"Gone," said Hank Dawson. "Slipped over the road, and the dog too."

Tom acted on the hint. Here he dashed away, and soon the party were on the traveled road.

At that moment Hen gave tongue.

"Then there was a pause, and all eyes shone—as about as the grass.

"Hello!" said Tom Biggers, as he explained Tom Biggers is a sage.

CHAPTER XII.

THE MEETING AT THE GRASS.

"What does it mean, anyhow?" said Biggers, turning to Chub.

"It means we're tricked—fooled by that sickly Sparkins," said Hank Dawson. "I had him now, I'd swear his brass."

"Maybe we're wrong, dad," said Chub.

"How do we know it was the Monks been trailing along after Sunny and the dogs scented them, and they've shot him?"

"Well, let us turn back and see," said Hank.

"No? Don't, dad."

"Why, Chub?"

"It's one thing to meet them at home, another to fight them in their, where they go at home, and you don't know who you are and quite sure."

"That's so, too."

"Everybody must know who is go for to try to court if they come to you—my here, it's hard to tell each other. The Monks would swear out of it."

"That's so, too."

"I wonder if the dog's dead?" said Tom.

The words were scarcely uttered when Hen flapped back to his master from where on whined, felt, and dropped in his lapping.

"Dog out of his home and covered as roundly under his breath as if the rufians had kicked his sweet relative.

"Well, dog, dog, Tom?"

"Dog was absent. Now then, not very hot! I'll get even with them as killed Henry. If I have to track on his pals, I'll get even with em."

"Let's go back, dad," said Chub.

The trip returned three stops, but no sound was heard. At one time Chub thought she heard a moan, but it was quickly lost in the Lowry, and they moved on.

"It's no use, Chub."

"No, I feel it is, father," said Chub sadly. "I know we have done all we could to go, and go a bit Sunny."

"Sunny! Sunny! Sunny! Sunny! Sunny!"

"Sunny! Sunny! Sunny! Sunny!"

"Sunny! Sunny! Sunny! Sunny!"

Elsewhere in this issue, to Tex. The plate making.

The stock subscribing the Diamond Plate-Glass Company, Kokomo and Elwood, Ind., hold their annual meeting on Congress-hall week and after electing officers the project of starting the plate works at Elwood, Ind., was discussed and met with the general approval of the plate-glass stockholders, many of whom signified their intention of joining the enterprise. Among the Ohio, Indiana and Chicago capitalists interested in the venture are Colonel A. L. Conger, George T. Pickens, A. M. Barber, F. M. Allison and E. A. Sutherlin, of Akron, O.; A. A. Cannon, John A. Jay, H. C. Davis, S. R. Laughlin, M. Sutherlin and A. C. Sutherlin, of Kokomo, Ind. It is the intention to organize with a tentative capital stock of $250,000, which will be increased from time to time. Considerable English capital will be invested, and several residents of Chicago have signified their intention of joining the company. It is said a new town that has sprung up in the natural gas regions of Indiana within the last two years. It is usually twenty miles south of Kokomo. The plan was set afoot by the present enterprise organized the Diamond Plate-Glass Company, which has a plant at Kokomo covering twelve acres and another at Elwood of thirteen acres. The glass company has a capital of $2,000,000.

In speaking of the new enterprise Colonel Conger said: "We will organize the plate glass company tomorrow after the stockholders' meeting of the Diamond Plate-Glass Company. The organization, which will be placed at Elwood, is merely a minimal figure and will doubtless have to be increased before we proceed far. We organized the plate-glass company in the same way, and it was not a big before we was to increase the capital stock to twelve hundred. We claim that we can make plate glass just as good as this country as that of any kind. There is no reason in the world why the manufacture of plate glass cannot be successful. We have interested with us men from Wales, and feel confident that we will turn out as fine an article as can be produced on the other side of the water. The new works will employ between 1,200 and 1,500 men, and they will be paited first and at rapid 5 or pieces. There is no doubt that when we begin to make plate glass in America the price will go down just as it did on plate-glass."—Hardware Journal.

The alleged fire fiends of Mt. Hikaso who are rushing into the president-ial question should bear in mind the fact that the sovereign of State is amply able to speak for himself when the proper time arrives.

Gen. Grant's big cabin will form an exhibit at the World's Fair. When he was poor "Uncle" engaged in trading on wood, nobody thought his entire as object of especial interest to us will now crowd to 79, just the same.

The Iron trade editors are now looking serious, as they allege, the American manufacturers, who have laboriously raised a "crowd" to control the industry, have a shady, and it now a "crisis" can be formed to an industry which—according to the oft-repeated declarations of these same free-trade editors—has no existence.

The editorials of the Democratic press on the Republican nomination for president in 1884 is truly pitiable. The Democratic press maintains an ominous silence however, as to the Democratic presidential candidacy. Hitherto, after the nomination of a Democratic candidate is a matter of very small moment. When the votes are counted the Democratic candidate, whoever he may be, will find that he "isn't in it."

Referring to the minor electoral act passed by the Michigan legislature the Boston Traveller says: "The action of the Michigan legislature is nothing more but less than an outrageous partisan scheme for giving the Democratic candidate a portion of the votes in the Republican state. It may not be unconstitutional, but it is revolutionary. If there is not to be uniformity in the method for choosing electors, the time is near at hand when the electoral system will have to go. The Constitution from the very beginning has been more than doubtful. It is safe to say that the electoral system is not go until some better system has been devised to take its place. In the early years of this republic, a great many plans for choosing the president were suggested, and all were in turn rejected, the present system being finally decided upon as the wisest and best. The present system has worked satisfactorily for nearly three-quarters of a century, and will scarcely be overthrown by the partisan schemes of a gang of squawbuck tricksters.

KITCHEN ETYMOLOGY.

The Odd Relationships of Many Words Connected in the Table.

The study of the origin of words brings to light many odd and unexpected relationships, says the Inter-Ocean. The word "kitchen," for example, brings little neighborly relationship to the word "cook," yet the two are from the same root, the Latin coquere to cook. Other derivatives from the same source are "cake" and "biscuit" (the latter a thing twice cooked), "cocoa," to cook together and "procrastinate," which means literally, cooked or ripened before the time.

The word "loaf," from the Anglo-Saxon hlaf, is now cousin, as we say, to two such unexpected words as "lady" and "lord" a lady is a loaf-kneader and a lord is a loaf-keeper.

"To sup," or to take "supper," is to eat the last meal of the day; but the original meaning of the word was to drink, a meaning still retained by the closely allied sup. From the same root we get the words "sop" and "soup."

How curiously terms take on a new significance is exemplified by the word "mustard." In these days a custard is a mixture of milk and eggs sweetened, and then baked or boiled. It may be cooked with or without pastry. But in sharply distinguished from it. Yet the word "custard" is from the same root as "crust," and originally meant a crust or pastry.

The connections of the word "salary" with "salt" is a matter of general knowledge but it is probably not so commonly known that "sauce," "sauce," "sauce," and "sausage" have the same value origin as also of "salting or seasoning having been frequently in them at."

When the ordinary reader looks in Webster's "Etymological Dictionary" for the word "sage" he is sure to be puzzled to find "sage, a poet, one wise." Why, what has a poet, one wise, to do with a herb? Why, the connection is very close indeed, the former meant and a wise person of antiquity. But the answer is easy. This old-time herb was supposed to have healing virtues and, therefore, was named "sage," a term derived from the Latin salvia, salt.

If we go to the same dictionary for the word "salad," we read: "Salad, see pickle." A salad was a dish of moist stuff on a wooden peg and "pickled" and "salted" have come from the same root.

A "cry" is nothing but a "clap" or a "clapper," a "luncheon" is a "lump," a "gore" broken off, a "shoe" is something cooked on a "spoon," and a "knife" is from "cut" a "dog"—was originally an intensive word with force, in other words, a sausage.

RETAKE THEIR SHIP.

Captain English and his Steamer Iran Reach San Diego.

The steamship Iran, which was seized at San Diego, Cal., by the United States Deputy Marshal and gang, taking a United States Deputy Marshal, who was on board with her. There is no doubt that the Filibus were determined to leave the harbor at any cost. One of the Mexican vessels, which was captured at the mouth of the harbor at a cost, but to keep a human man that when the Iran passed out she pulled was stand her bottom, two round shings eight inch canon fourteen inch bow and stern. It also was than at least eight armed Chilians were drawn up on the deck armed to teeth. It is thought that either the vessel which pursued had orders to sink the Iran if she made resistance, or else the officers of that vessel the only arms displayed on board were a gun and some rifles, and that they were afraid that some of the men would be killed in the fight.

Captain English, of the Iran, gave the following account of the affair: Early in the morning, I was awakened by the cry that the Chilian vessel was coming. I ran on deck and saw the vessel coming with a gun on her bow. I had my men armed with rifles and told them to retake the ship, if possible. The Chilian officer came on board and said he had orders to take the ship. I said I would not give up the ship. He said he would take it. I said he could take it if he could. He said he would sink us if we did not. I said I would take the chance. He said he would give us five minutes to think it over. I said I would do it in less time than that. OUR CHARTER.

Amendments Thereto Pass Both Houses and Await the Governor's Signature.

The following is the full text of the amendments to the charter of the village of Charlevoix, which have passed both houses of the Legislature:

A Bill to amend Act No 356 of the Local Acts of 1879, entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Village of Charlevoix," approved April 3d, 1879, amended by Act No. 305, of the Local Acts of 1885, entitled "An Act to amend section four of Act No. 356 of the Local Acts of 1879, entitled "An Act to incorporate the Village of Charlevoix, approved April 3d, 1879," approved March 5th, 1885, by adding thereto four new sections to stand as sections number 8, 9, 10 and 11.

SEC. 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That Act No. 356 of the Local Acts of 1879, entitled (as above,) be and the same is amended by adding four new sections thereto, to stand as Sections 8, 9, 10 and 11, to read as follows:

SEC. 8. The Common Council of said village shall have power to regulate the construction, repair and use of vaults, privies, cisterns, areas, hydrants, pumps, sewers and gutters.

SEC. 9. The council may by ordinance direct and regulate the construction of cellars, slips, barns, private drains, sinks, vaults and privies, compel the owner or occupant to fill up, drain, cleanse, alter, clean or repair the same, or cause the same to be done by some proper officer of the corporation, and assess the expenses thereof on the lot or premises having such cellar, slip, barn, private drain, sink, vault or privy thereon.

SEC. 10. The common council of said village shall have authority to provide by ordinance for the preservation of the purity of the waters of Round Lake and Pine River within said village, and the waters of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan within two miles from the corporate boundaries thereof, to prohibit and punish the causing or depositing therein of any filth, refuse, floating matter, or any injurious thing; to control and regulate the anchorage, moorage and arrangement of all boats, watercraft and floats within the jurisdiction of the village; to prescribe the speed and mode of entering, passing through and leaving Pine River, (both upper and lower, channels, so called,) and Round Lake, and of coming to and departing from the docks, wharves and landings within the said village by boats, water-craft and floats; and to regulate and prescribe by such ordinance, or through a harbor master such location of any boat, craft, vessel or float, and such changes of station in and use of Round Lake and Pine River as shall prevent the formation of sandbars or other obstruction to navigation, as may be required to promote order therein, and the safety and convenience of such boats, craft, vessels and floats, and to regulate the opening and passage of bridges, and generally to make and enforce such ordinances and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States or of this state, as in the opinion of the council shall best subserve the interests of the navigation of Round Lake and Pine River, and be most conducive to the orderly, safe and convenient use and occupancy of the harbor, navigable waters, wharves, docks, piers and landing places within the village.

SEC. 11. The council shall appoint a harbor master, whose duty it shall be to enforce all such ordinances and regulations as the council may lawfully enact and prescribe in respect to, and over the navigable waters, harbor, wharves, docks, landings and basins within the village, and prescribe the powers and duties of said harbor master, and fix his compensation.

Fine Ellsworth.

Once again we will make an effort to appear as a regular correspondent.

Our school is progressing finely under the care of Miss Hattie Borst, of Torch Lake.

Chas. Hilman is erecting a barn.

F. J. Meech was here Monday on railroad business.

S. Deline is busy rebuilding his barn.

The first fishing party of the season was Charlie Ferguson and some of his Norwood friends. They had very good success.

Mr. French, of East Jordan, is buying ties and posts to be delivered on the line of the railroad extension.

—The Epworth League of the M. E. Church have arrangements complete for a "Ship Social" to be given at Bartholome's hall, Friday evening, May 22. Entrees from the "ring book" will form the literary part of the entertainment. The crew have provided a cargo of ice cream and cake which will be disposed of at noon. Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

Charlevoix tugs don't pool this season.

Incarnate steam yacht Kittie arrived from Port Huron last night.

The yacht Margaret is hauled out at Campbell's yard for caulking.

The steamer Crescent was over from Grand Traverse bay Sunday.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids arrived here Monday on her first trip.

The schooner Geo. W. Davis arrived Saturday from Sandusky with 300 tons of coal for Tullock. She will take lumber from Nicholls, Lewis & Bates to Cleveland.

A smoky atmosphere caused the steamer Soo City to run on Graham Shoal, in the straits, on her first trip. She released herself by throwing over 150 barrels of salt.

The schooner Levi Grant, which loaded here last week, came into collision with the Gilbert Knapp, off Racine, last week Tuesday, in perfectly clear weather. The Knapp put into Racine badly disabled, and the Grant went on to Chicago with her main rigging gone and her rail smashed. By the rules the Grant had the right of way, and the Knapp was libelled for the damages.

The dredge is nearly through work at the mouth of the river, on the section from the shore end of the piers to deep water. It will require only a few days more to finish to Round Lake, and then the upper channel will be dredged. Mr. Daley says when he gets through we will have fourteen feet to a point inside any danger of shore drift, and thirteen from there to Pine Lake. The machine is only making one cut, but it is sixty feet wide.

The small schooner Kimball, of Northport, was lost with all hands near the Manitous last Friday, by collision with some unknown craft. The Kimball was bound from Manistee to Sutton's Bay with 200 barrels of salt and 250,000 shingles. Her crew consisted of Capt. James Stevens, late master of the schooner Horace M. Smith, of this port, Chas. Keid, of Northport, mate, one seaman, name unknown, and a passenger named Wolfe, of Northport. Capt. Stevens and Keid Bros. were joint owners of the vessel. The cargo was consigned to W. S. Johnson & Co.

Hastings From Hayes.

Amos Stauffer will rebuild his residence as soon as the insurance is adjusted.

E. R. Sly is building a fine residence at Triple Rock.

Mrs. George Saunby is very sick with paralysis.

Rev. G. A. Bowles, of Petoskey, is making pastoral calls upon the U. B. membership this week.

Mr. Garmeyer has rented the Wolf farm of Mrs. Case, and now occupies it.

The Highway Commissioner of Bear Creek, Liberty Ingalls, has let several jobs of work on his share of the county line road. Bear Creek votes $3,000 road tax.

"There is nothing succeeds like success." Formerly, when a highway order on Hayes was presented to a man for discount, if he had any sense in him he took off his hat and let it out. Now Hayes is out of debt and has paid up all outstanding orders, it is astonishing to hear of the number of orders that have been lost; and were it not that the town board kept all of the old vouchers on file when they last settled, some men would have the audacity to ask the town to duplicate orders they had sold.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It Will Be Appropriately Observed, Under the Direction of the G. A. R.

Memorial Day, May 30, will be observed at Charlevoix under the auspices of Baxter Post, No. 119, G. A. R. An invitation has been extended to neighboring Posts, and arrangements made for their entertainment. The plan is to set aside one day of the year in honor of the dead in a wise one. Our dead remain with us to bother memories, and being remote business cannot be more properly manifested than by these doral offerings. Let the observance of the day be general.

The procession will form at one o'clock p. m. on Bridge street, with the right resting on Clinton street. The line of march to the cemetery will be via Antrim and State streets. The order of march will be as follows:

1. Schools.
2. Women's Relief Corps.
3. Sons of Veterans.
4. Veteran Men.
5. Other societies and Citizens.

At the cemetery the following exercises will be observed:

1. Ritual service at the cemetery.
2. Music.
3. Address, Prof. H. M. Lyon.
4. Decoration of graves by the W. R. C. escorted by drum squad.

Work Begins this Week.

Grand Rapids Democrat, May 16: Work on the Chicago & West Michigan extension from Traverse City to Charlevoix and Petoskey, will begin all along the line this week. Subcontracts for about forty-five miles of the road has been let. The Messrs. McLaine have let most of the contracts to sub-contractors who have worked with them in Alabama and other states. The vice president of the company, William Alden Smith, returned yesterday from a trip over the line. He says the contract for the road from Traverse City to Elk Rapids has been let, and is a beautiful line running along the shore nearly all the way. Contracts for the rock work and deep cut just out of Petoskey has been awarded and work will begin tomorrow.

It is quite a sore thing for Charlevoix papers to declare "seven vessels entered this port on Sunday and all of them of large class." Why not give a little further friends and tell your readers how many of these vessels loaded there. We believe we are safe in saying, not one—Boyne Citizen. That's where you are off. Within the week ending last Wednesday evening, there loaded in Charlevoix harbor six vessels, the John Haber, I. M. Forrest, Moses Gage, Young America, Sea Gem, and Louie A. Burton, and we have lots of stuff to ship yet, on the docks, and looking more every day. There is more life in Charlevoix at twelve o'clock Sunday night than there is in Boyne City Fourth of July all day.

Boyne City News.

Wallace Bailey left on Thursday for Buffalo, to be gone all summer. Wallace is one of our popular young men.

Tan bark is on the move. About 200 cords will be shipped here this season. Kicking will be in order later.

The neighboring G. A. R. posts will observe Decoration Day here on the 30th. Walter Clifford post will stretch itself and do the hospitable act in their usual good style.

Eugene Ward lost three of his fingers in a shingle mill north of Petoskey.

The two unruly Indians were taken where they will be good for five years on Tuesday.

Frank Osburn is again at work in the beginner's office.

The Morgan dock, now owned by White & Co., is undergoing repairs which will make it an excellent landing place for boats and largely increase its capacity for shipping.

A. J. Hall died on Thursday and was buried on Friday.

CARPENTER, BARTHOLOMEW & CO.

From Marion.

Mr. Herkimer, from Smithson's Camp has settled on the Skilmer place.

Mrs. Shottle has arrived from Canada and joined her husband who arrived last spring and occupies the Burns place.

A number of board fences are being built this spring. This adds very much to the appearance of a farm.

Homer Clark was in Eastport last Sunday.

Mrs. Wm. Clark was in Petoskey last week.

Mrs. George Clark, of St. Ignace is visiting friends in Marion.

Miss Abbie Matchet was home Sunday.

James Adams lost a fine mare and colt last week.

E. A. H. Cole, of East Jordan, is sojourning in Texas.

Railroad matters have already given Indian an impetus.

The Elk Rapids Progress is re-publishing the Antrim County tax-sales, but the Progress says Ben is in the soup again owing to fatal errors.

Petoskey Democrat: All pioneers of Petoskey will remember Hiv. Mr. Hutchins, the enthusiastic and eccentric pioneer preacher, who labored so zealously in this vicinity sixteen or seventeen years ago. We regret to learn of his death, which occured in Alabama about two weeks ago.

Engineer McVean and Northrup, of the Chicago and North Michigan railroad, were in Bellaire last week. They located the depot for the new railroad.

There is a village called Mesick in Wexford county and the people who find themselves left in the town throw a deal of emphasis on the name as they pronounce it.

Gaylord Times: Wm. Meras' shingle mill at Boyne Falls burned to the ground about 12 o'clock Monday night. The fire was caused by sparks from a passing train. Although Mr. Meras had a stock of some 2,000,000 of shingles on hand, these were not injured, neither was the large stock shingle bolts. The mill will be rebuilt at once.

Grand Traverse Herald: R. W. Crane has sold his proprietor-ship in the National Hotel to George Marshall of Charlevoix.—The Messrs. Meras, who have contracted to build the entire extension of the C. & W. M. from Traverse City to Petoskey, have arrived and are making sub-contracts with different parts of the world. H. R. Clark has the contract for the first seven miles out of town, and began work this morning.

Petoskey Record: Gen. A. C. Litchfield has a niece living at La Pardieu, Switzerland, and last week the general shipped to her husband 200 fir balsam trees from here.——Mr. H. C. Atkins, accidental of Bear Creek township, died at his residence on Wednesday of last week.——If we are not misinformed the J. H. McLaine & Co., who have the contract for building the C. & W. M. to Petoskey, were the builders of the famous "Nickle Plate," which was so perfectly constructed that on the day after the road had been turned over to the directors a train was run over it from one end to the other at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

Vote also requests us to express his heartfelt thanks for the sympathetic resolutions of his friends.

Correspondence.

A writer in some of our local papers, signing himself "W. E. H." effectually disposes of, in the said, i. p., Gen. Cutcheon's recent article upon the constitutionality of the Miner law recently passed by the legislature. Of course we are convinced, we had to be; everything in the criticism was asserted not simply as a fact, but as an axiom, needing no proof. It is not because our heart melts with sympathy for General, because of the unnecessary manner in which his opinions and historical data have been turned to destruction against the statesman, that we are led to commit our criticisms to paper, nor from a conviction that the Hon. gentleman needs our assistance, but a laudable ambition to supply the lack of news, and thus discharge our duty as a correspondent. We are first curious to know in what edition of the constitution the words "each state shall choose, etc." occurs? Our copy reads, "Each State shall appoint, etc." Second we are curious to learn from what historical work we may obtain the information that Massachusetts appointed her electors by districts, dividing the state into two equal or unequal parts for the choice of electors at large? In return for any information that may come to us in answer to the above inquiries, we freely offer the following suggestions to W. E. H. (1.) That without a dictionary he contrasts quite pertinent suggestions as to the significance of the terms "choose" and "appoint," and if Noah be not mistaken, W. E. H. got the wrong words in his quotation. (2.) That Bancroft's History of the U. S. if we remember correctly, states that for a period of years Massachusetts legislature appointed her electors of President and does not state that her legislature ever delegated the appointment to the representative districts, and divided the state into two other parts for the election of electors at large, one in each part.

(3.) That a careful reading of Gen. Cutcheon's article will show that much of the argument rests upon the assumption of the words "state" and "appoint," hence for a fair criticism, if these words occur in the constitution, a writer to furnish correct information for his readers should quote correctly. Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

The steamer North Star is towing logs for several mills up the lake.

Joe Swails is making a mizzen boom for the schooner Morning Star.

The Friant went to Bower's Harbor Monday with a load of lumber for Kirkpatrick's job.

The magnificent steamer Soo City, of the Northern Michigan line, came into the harbor last night for the first time.

The steamer Petoskey broke three buckets off her wheel recently while going out of this harbor. She went to Chicago and secured a new wheel.

The small steamer Gazelle, of the Mackinac and St. Ignace route, went ashore on Round Island lately and she came here last week, and hauled out for resaulking.

The tug Alice Campbell, in trying to save the schooner Annie O. Hansen, at Frankfort recently, went ashore with the vessel. The schooner was released, but the Campbell is a goner.

The fine steamer E. L. Hackley leaves Muskegon to-day for Charlevoix, and will go on the Charlevoix and Boyne City route, making two trips per day. The Hackley is about the size of the Friant, and is a fast boat. This will give Boyne City and other Pine Lake points the best connection they have ever had, and we hope every encouragement will be given her. Capt. Seth Lee is her master.

The schooner Surprise towed out Wednesday evening with hemlock and cedar ties for Barker. The weather was foggy and the wind light, and for those two reasons, the captain says, the vessel drifted until she brought up on the reef running out from the west point. She went on the rocks, and filled. The captain threw over his deck load, and then came ashore and induced the U. S. tug Williams to go out and yank on her, but without any success. It was not until Friday night that the tug Leviathan were secured from Cheboygan with a steam pump. The vessel was then released and taken to Manitowoc.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

Established 1889.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.

CHARLEVOIX, MAY 27, 1891.

Whatever some people may think, Mr. Cleveland evidently thinks he is still "in it," and he did not forget to say so in his recent Buffalo speech.

The leading Democrats of Ohio are already beginning to concede the defeat of any person they may nominate against the gallant and valiant Major McKinley. It is said that they are bending all their energies to secure a United States senator to succeed Senator Sherman, yet even with their infamous gerrymander it is extremely doubtful if they accomplish the undertaking.

The Cobden club of England, as literal readers noted, has decided to dispense with its annual banquet this year and to devote the money it would have cost to the dissemination of free-trade lodge in the United States. These gentlemen would better have eaten their dinner, then they would have the satisfaction of knowing that they got something for their money. All the wealth of England, great as it is, could not make free trade popular in this country.

Trusts, so-called, in this country, are the results, in large degree, of free trade between the various states of the Union, and not the result of any protection, the tendency of which, in itself, is to avert the monstrous condition which lead to the formation of trusts. The direct tendency of free trade is to foster trusts, through the desperate stress of commercial warfare; and there are more trusts today in free-trade England than in the United States.

Our Democratic friends are not so confident of carrying everything before them next year as they were a few months ago. Just now they are doing penance for their sins of the Annapolis sort in the last campaign, which time has fully shown up, just as the Republican workers and editors told the people it would. A political victory won under false pretenses is always dearly bought, and is sure to prove a boomerang. Truth and honesty, in politics as in private business, are necessary to permanent success.

Grover Cleveland, in his latest public utterance, bewailed "the reckless and wicked extravagance of our public expenditures." When Grover was in the white house, he sat up nights and worked in his shirtsleeves to prevent the wicked extravagance of which he complains, by vetoing pension bills. And he was so much afraid of "scumming" the public money by applying it on the national debt, that he hoarded it in certain favorite national banks, without taking the trouble to collect interest on the deposits. Great is Grover.

Here is a news paragraph that is a forceful argument for the McKinley tariff act, that Democratic newspapers which value free trade above news did not print at all, and which other Democratic papers printed in the most obscure positions: "Chicago capitalists have formed a contract with an Elwood, Indiana, land syndicate for the erection of a tin-plate factory at that place, to employ 500 persons. The plant is to be in operation Jan. 1, 1892. It will be used to employ the 500 persons to be employed at this factory, that protection is an injury to the toiling masses.

Grand Rapids Democrat, 21st: The Michigan Masonic Home will be opened today without ceremony. It was intended to have a demonstration at the opening, but, owing to the street railway strike, the program has been indefinitely postponed. John D. Jennings, who is called the father of the home, will be the first inmate. His wife and children will go with him. Mr. Jennings is one of the best known Masons in the state, and it was with him that the idea of building the home originated. Shortly after the corner stone was laid he was stricken with paralysis, and it is proposed to make he and his aged wife pensioners while in their lay days. At present there will be no matron of the home, but as soon as the street cars resume a grand social gathering will be held at the home at which time arrangements will be made for its management.

A Petoskey special to the Grand Rapids Democrat of the 21st says: "A set of bottled-up and other kinds of excitement has existed here for the past few days owing to the fact that John G. Hill caused a summons to be issued against the Rev. James G. Inglis for slandering his daughter (I $10,000). Mr. Inglis has closed his pastorate here and leaves for his new field of labor in Chicago this week. The suit grows out of some remarks made at a temperance meeting last Sabbath which Mr. Hill appropriated to himself, although no name were mentioned. The young temperance men got out last night and hung Mr. Hill in effigy.

ABDUL HAMID.

What the Grand Turk Looks Like in His Own Palace.

Abdul Hamid is of medium height, rather short than tall, well-proportioned in his person, and carrying heavily the weight of his custom duties, though there are also moments when he sits and carelessly look cross across his face, and when he almost persuades the apathy we so generally associate with the Turkish character, says "Sovereigns and Courts of Europe." His beard, cut into a slight point, is black as are his hair and eyes. The latter are tender in expression, but also penetrating, and he looks his visitors straight in the face with a scrutiny that seems to read their thoughts. What destroys the pleasant first impression made by these eyes is the constant lack of sensitiveness in them.

The fact is Abdul Hamid does not feel himself safe even in his own palaces. He does not suspect any person in particular, but he is on his guard against every one. * * * He has his whims have been so balanced by their subjects so far. Indeed, he is to them quite a new type of sultan and they do not fail to appreciate the novelty. Here is a man who does not pass his days in his harem trying with his slaves. Here is a man who takes a real interest in the welfare of his people, who, far from following the example of his predecessors and leaving the rules of government in the hands of some clever courtiers, resolves on seeing and judging all for himself, down to the smallest parliament.

Personally he is most temperate and kind-hearted, and scarcely a month passes that he does not contribute some large sum out of his private purse to alleviate suffering among his subjects, irrespective of race or religion. His character may be summed up as having for its dominant note an extreme caution, and he is endowed with an unusual facility for work. In manner he is exceedingly polite, especially in his treatment of European ladies. Indeed, he understands the rare art of making himself respected by all with whom he comes in contact.

Abdul Hamid gets up early. His toilet does not detain him long; indeed, he might detain him longer according to European codes. Dressed he sit down to a cup of coffee and instantly afterward begins to smoke cigarettes, a pastime that he continues all day almost without intermission, for he is an ardent smoker. Breakfast ended, he arranges family affairs when those require his attention, as is almost always the case with so large a family and of such varied ages and needs. This done he quits the harem and goes into the selamlik.

Here he receives the reports concerning court affairs. Toward 10 o'clock his court secretary and chief aides-de-camp are in attendance, bearing the day's dispatches and reports. These handled in the silken seats Himself on a sofa, with, on his right, these documents and on his left a pile of Turkish newspapers and extracts from the European press, translated into Turkish for his benefit by a translation bureau specially appointed to that end. His lunch, which follows the dispatch of this is most simple—little meat, a fair amount of vegetables.

The meal ended he will take a walk in the park or ride on a little float upon one of the lakes it inclosses, always accompanied by a considerable or some high dignitary. After taking two hours' exercise in the open air he returns to his sitting-rooms, where he holds an open reception or else presides over some committee meeting. At 7 o'clock or two hours before he sets more goes out for a walk. His dinner is simple, consisting of a little meat, fowl or game, sweets and a very little wine. He never touches spirituous liquors, in obedience to the commands of the prophet, but he drinks large quantities of sherbet and eats a great deal of ice cream.

Dinner over, he receives company in the selamlik, or he will retire into the harem, where his daughters play and sing for him. He himself or those attendants will then sing himself in the piano, an instrument he plays fairly well. For pacing, for fine arts in general, he has no taste. His women, too, find him very cold, but he is devoted to his children, and also much attached to the members of his family.

OF COURSE THE BOY WAS INNOCENT.

But the Milkman Would Like to Get Hold of Him.

There is a milkman on the North side who is looking for a boy with a lantern. When he finds the right boy and the right lantern he is going to thrash the one and smash the other.

This milkman has a trained horse. He makes his rounds about 4 a. m. It and, as it is dark then, he carries a lantern. When he arrives at a house at which he has a number of customers he takes a can of milk in one hand and a lantern in the other and goes from house to house. The horse follows the lantern as long as it is in sight. The moment it disappears in a doorway or behind a house the horse stops and waits for its reappearance.

Very convenient and wise it is for the milkman, but the other morning when he was saying pretty things to some sweet girl a boy emerged from an alley near where he had dropped operated.

And the boy carried a lantern.

As he moved down the street the horse followed him. The boy noticed it and stopped. The horse stopped also. The boy looked at the horse intently for a moment and then turned on. The horse also started. The boy stopped again, and this time he seemed to watch on so to speak. He put the lantern down and went on by himself. The horse didn't move. Then stole the boy. He went back, picked up the lantern, and went whistling down the street.

After the milkman had run three blocks to overtake the horse and wagon he came upon a boy with a lantern standing in front of a house. He was about a dozen following him a boy who was surprised to think that a horse would come with a blessed fool as to do such a thing. The boy said so himself and when the milkman had been blindfold of the boy concluded to himself took him for a lantern disappearing down an alley. Chicago Tribune.

The habitual drinker is hardly an amusing spectacle, and yet one had a great many smiles.—St. Joseph News.

Northern Michigan News.

Capt. Hartwell, of Harbor Springs, has removed to Chicago.

The St. Ignace Legonbitiens intimates that the relations between some of the soldiers at Fort Mackinac and the young men of the village are somewhat strained and that personal encounters have occurred on the streets.

The Petoskey Presbyterians gave Rev. J. G. Inglis a most affectionate good by upon his leaving to accept pastoral duties in Chicago. Petoskey citizens generally participated in the farewell services. Mr. & Mrs. Inglis will be at Bay View and Petoskey for a month this summer and his people expect to see much of them.

Horace Gittins, who undertook the organization of the Horton's Creek Milling Co. has been completed and Z. N. Gaskill has been retained as attorney to see that everything is right and lawful.—W. H. White will build and operate a band saw mill north of his present site, this fall. The capacity of the new mill will be 20,000 of hardwood per day.

The following is from the able pen of Mr. Hampton, of the Petoskey Democrat. "The Kalkaska Leader says at a recent fire the hose being of insufficient length the flames were speckled by the use of dirt. Here's a new field for mud slinging politicians. Let them join the fire department." This is fine philosophy to come from the champion mud-slinger of Northern Michigan. Petoskey Democrat. "The Oberlin Wyldland case was taken under advisement by judge Severens, who was to render his decision inside of ten days. The general impression is that Mrs. Oberlinder will be defeated. Should the opposite prove true it would involve a vast number of holdings of land under the Wyldell title, in expensive litigation, and cause a general overturning of titles.

From the Boyne Citizen we learn that "the four snow fleas" a railroad will be in operation between Boyne City and Boyne Falls. Also, that the T. & A. will be there in '92. Also, that the Michigan Central will build from Vanderbilt inside of fourteen months. Also the Boyne City, Vanderbilt & Lake Huron Railroad, with western terminus at Boyne City. More later.

Something New.

If our readers wish to see the latest thing out in the way of playing cards they should send 15 cents in stamps to Geo. DeHaven, general passenger agent Grand Rapids, Mich., for a pack of the new playing cards issued by the Chicago & West Michigan and the Detroit, Lansing & Northern lines. These cards are quite novel and contain much information may be gathered from them.

FARMERS, READ THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any farm tool this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S.

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implements, have become acquainted with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we assure you at whatever effort, we have secured the best and latest improved machine with which to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and exclusive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better article for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these representations, and if you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place.

CIGAR-DRINKING HABIT.

Startling Growth of the Use of a Dangerous Beverage.

The ginger habit has supplemented the ginger ale craze in the Philadelphia Times. It has become a kind of fad in certain classes of society, and its disciples in ever increasing numbers are forcing it upon the attention of physicians, while, as an outgrowth of high income legislation, it is at the same time recommending itself to the attention of lawmakers.

The ginger habit is worse than the ordinary liquor habit, because it is more rapid in its effects and means earlier ruin to the victim of the individual. It has only a few fifty cents to the expenditure of physicians and druggists that its thousands of families the peppery dose that has been the prime mover in the production of innocents and reformed by has become an agent of debauchery.

The fine-cut of ginger, or Jamaica ginger, as it is popularly known, is the strongest and most irritating alcoholic solution known, ranking next to alcohol absolute, which is inestimable and stands equal to commercial alcohol, which it never used as a beverage. The Jamaica ginger is sold by druggists and grocers in four-ounce vials, and the unsuspicious purchaser is cautioned at one cannot and separately. During the past few months the demand for this article, which has been steadily growing for a number of years, has become unprecedented, and some druggists are already beginning to "dog" habitual inquirers.

Dr. W. L. McConnell of 250 South Tenth street said yesterday: "The use of ginger dates back to the time when it came into common use. It continues to be quite extensively adopted, and in no cases of ginger there is more than a moderate quantity. The way it is now being used is amazing. I know a physician, quite forty prominent, who has pronounced, who died only a short time ago, from the effects of ginger drinking. You would think a physician would know better, and he did, but in spite of the warnings and protestations of his friends he continued until he's — one is daily as a beverage. Calls it a cordial.

"I was in a drug store only a few days ago when a young girl came to the counter and asked for a pound of ginger. The druggist said she's been buying it every day. He knew that her mother and her sisters drank it, but it had never occurred to him that he should refuse to sell them the article. I told the druggist that I attend a woman who admitted to me that she was in the habit of taking sixteen ounces a day. Think what a blow that is! Ginger is the most powerful of all the stimulants. Its effects are more lasting than those of any other stimulant. Its effects are more lasting than those of any other stimulant. The ginger drinker invariably feels the effect of it. Unlike the varieties of ordinary intoxication. You can find all the symptoms of strong cordials of the very center of the city doing an enormous business in ginger, and the same with the grocery stores. Taste ought to be legislation against its indiscriminate sale, the same as there is against the indiscriminate sale of other alcoholic drinks."

A New Playwright.

Mrs. Mary E. Bryant, who draws the largest number of any woman either in the United States has written a play. She is one and entitled "Big Bonnet Pam." It is the experience of a New York playwright with the season in the one story of a lodging house. The greatest, perhaps little woman in a Georgia problem, summary giving as so many writers as a child and a dog. Sometimes the author, in transmission working, writes day and night, most of the time sitting on the floor Turk fashion, with her copy paper on a lap-board, and the whole place littered with pencil chips.

DIRT MOVING!

Active Operations Begun Here Yesterday on the C & W. M. Extension.

Mr. J. H. McLean, the general contractor of the C. & W. M. extension arrived here by Steamer Petoskey Sunday, and put up at the Bridge Street House, where our scribe found him in the evening. He evidently don't like reporters, but after a little sparring, he gave all the information desired.

"Barring strikes," he said, "or other unforseen contingencies, I expect to have the iron on the road from Traverse City to Petoskey by Nov. 1st, next. We expect 300 men at Petoskey Tuesday, and other subcontractors are getting their men into the field rapidly from Traverse City north. Nearly the entire job is now sub-let. Six miles from Charlevoix south is let to a man named Cink, of Grand Rapids, and I expect he will be on the ground this week."

The only portion of the road that will not be sub-let, is the old D. C. & E. grade north of this place. This Mr. McLean expects to complete himself, making it about three feet wider. Mr. Keeley, the foreman in charge of that work, is here, and yesterday got a small force of men at work north of town. He wants all the men and teams he can get, and will pay $1.50 per day for men and $3.50 for teams, to be paid the 15th of every month.

Mr. McLean has leased Fox's north warehouse in which to store supplies, and Monday a quantity of hay and feed arrived by the steamer City of Grand Rapids.

Within the next week dirt will be moving all along the line from Traverse City north, and if no trouble is experienced, Charlevoix will have a Chicago train in 1892.

Division Engineer Northrup, who has charge of the line for the company, was here Sunday.

Engineer Harris, the engineer in charge here, is busy cross-sectioning the line both sides of the river, and Monday sent in data relating to water stages of the past ten years, presumably in the matter of bridge construction. There is no doubt that the bridge will be built this summer although no information concerning it can be secured.

—Antrim Herald.

East Jordan Enterprise: Messrs Brown and Collier of this place have been awarded the contract to furnish ties for the new railroad from Traverse City to Petoskey. These ties are to be delivered from Central Lake to Petoskey.

Grand Traverse Herald: The C. & W. M. extension will take it to land mail, north of the lakes, with a spur to Elk Rapids, but the people of that town will be given such a thorough train service that they will wonder how that they are on a spur.

Traverse Bay Eagle: The work of grading for the Charlevoix and Petoskey extension of the C. & W. M. from Traverse Bay has been commenced. Quite a large force of men and teams are at work just east of the G. T. crossing.—Different contractors are locating all along the extention of the C. & W. M. between here and the lakes. Messrs. Lawry & Clark have the concract for grading the first seven miles out from Traverse Bay.

Petoskey Record: Messrs. Breed and Foster subcontractors who use to build the C. & W. M. between Charlevoix and Petoskey. Are at work. They have built work shanties beyond the Fair grounds for the workmen who will make the big cut west of the village. A force was set at work Monday chopping out the right of way and at least the announcement may be made that the road is under construction.

The Bellaire Breeze has the following railroad items: Four surveyors are now at Spencer Creek setting grade stakes and doing other work on the ,alined.——Actual work in clearing and grading has commenced all along the line of our railroad, and only a few months will elapse till Bellaire sees the construction train.——A contract covering the distance from Bellaire to a few miles north of Central Lake has been sublet by Contractor McLean to a gentleman from Ohio, and work will begin very soon.——Contractor McLean has sublet contracts that cover the territory from Traverse City to a few miles this side of Spencer Creek, and men are now at work grading for the railroad.

Hayings from Hayes.

Mrs. Ella Baker, of East Jordan, is visiting friends in Hayes.

The board of review closed its labors Tuesday. The total valuation of the town is $112,080. Personal $9,080. Resident realty, $63,575. Non resident, $44,375.

Mrs B. H. Whitman, of East Jordan, has the guest of B. S. Newson and family the past week.

Peter McNally is building a residence on his farm near the old homestead. Peter is one of the largest landholders in Hayes.

Bro. Inwood, of the Democrat, seems to have a relapse of the malady ailing, but his neighbors seem to know where to go to strike a job, when they want a little cash.

The highway commissioner is making out his road warrants this week. We hope the Highways will become entitled to the name.

The stockholders of the Horton's Bay Flour and Feed Milling Company held a meeting in Charlevoix last Saturday for the purpose of perfecting the organization by adopting by-laws, electing a board of directors and other officers. A board of nine directors was chosen, one from each township represented by the stockholders. Franklin Coleman, of Horton's Bay, was elected President, James Infworth, of Horton's Bay, was elected Treasurer, and Levi Lewis, of Hayes, Secretary. Between six and seven thousand dollars worth of stock has been subscribed and the intention is to "get to grind."

Willie Bradley, who has been staying with his grandfather Ross the past year, will return to his home in Chicago soon.

R. L. Corlett, county secretary was visiting our schools the last week.

John Billien and wife and Miss Julia Timm, of Bear Lake, were the guests of Mark Sunsby on Sunday.

A jolly load of visitors, consisting of Mrs. F. E. Fogg, Miss Mary Scroggie and Miss Lilla Payton, of East Jordan, Mrs. Sarah Scroggie, Mrs. Wm. Scroggie and Miss Minnie Lyons, of Charlevoix, were visiting Wm. Gray's and D. E. Scroggie's last Thursday.

Morrell Long and wife are rejoicing over the birth of a son.

Mrs. Dale, who has been at Dr. Doust's Sanitarium in Petoskey, for some time past returned home Sunday, much improved in health.

S. W. Sliter and wife, of Charlevoix were visiting at John Kopf's on Sunday.

Bert Copping is in Chicago and Milwaukee this week on business.

From Clarion.

Alfred Haas has returned from his visit at Mackinac. Had a good time, for he looks well and hearty.

Mr N. Thompson is having a new fence built around his lot, this and the sidewalk in front of Mr. H. A. Boby's looks well. Let's have more of it.

Mr. Randall, of Mancelona, takes his place at foreman today, (Monday) as Mr. Geo. Strickland has decided to go in business for himself.

Milton Holley returned home from Mackinac sick two weeks ago, is slowly improving and will go back accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Henry McConnell to make his physician a visit.

Sunday evening, May 31st, the Y. P. C. U. will hold an anniversary at the U. B. church. A good time is delighted. All are invited.

ATTACKED BY A BUFFALO.

How Sir Samuel Baker Saved the Life of a Fellow Hunter.

Sir Samuel W. Baker, in his latest book, "Wild Beasts and Their Ways," narrates an adventure which shows that a hunter's life may depend upon his attention to small details. Sir Samuel and Mr. Dick were shooting in Africa, when they saw a solitary bull buffalo on the opposite side of a small creek. The bull was evidently in a state of great excitement, for as the hunters drew near he faced them, tore up the turf with his horns, and looked down the perpendicular bank, twelve feet high, as though meditating descent.

Dick, who carried a little rifle, a single barrel, which shot a small spherical ball load, by Sir Samuel's advice, doubled his charge of powder.

"Aim at the back of the neck if the buffalo lowers his head," said Sir Samuel to his companion, "throwing a handful of earth so that it fell into water at the foot of the bank. The splash caused the animal to look down, exposing his neck. Dick fired. The ball convulsively turned round, and fell upon his side.

The two men waded across the creek at a shallow place, and ran to where the prostrate animal was lying apparently dead. Dick standing in front of the bull's head, chuckled in the delight of his first buffalo.

"Never stand at the head of a buffalo, whether dead or alive!" exclaimed Sir Samuel, whose experience had taught him to be cautious. "Stand upon the side, facing the back of the animal, well away from its legs, as I am standing now."

Scarcely had he uttered the words, when the bull sprang to six feet and lumbered forward straight at the astonished Dick, not three feet distant. He jumped forward to avoid the horns, but tripped and fell upon his back right in the path of the savage bull.

As quick as lightning Sir Samuel drew his long hunting-knife and plunged it behind the buffalo's shoulder. The animal fell on the blow. He had received his death-stroke.

His hunting-knife had not been tempered steel, with a keen edge and a sharp point, the story would have had a tragical ending. The blade—part of an old Andrea Ferrara' Highland claymore—was 18 inches long, 2 inches in breadth, double-edged, and as sharp as it was possible to make it.

Sir Samuel saw to it that it was always in the condition of a surgeon's lancet. He never left the camp for a day's sunting without first examining its point and edge. No servant was allowed to handle it and when it needed sharpening he himself honed it. When he struck the buffalo the sharp double-edge of the long knife divided the great artery of the heart.

It is estimated that from 90,000 to 100,000 skins feed in the forests of Scotland, and that 4,000 stags are killed annually.

—The graduating class of the High School are preparing for their graduating exercises, which are to occur on Lewis Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening, June 16th.

—Grand Rapids Democrat: The wine men of Charlevoix village council have bumped their heads together and decided that a cow is no lady, that will roost on the sidewalk.

—John Connor will next week enlarge and arrange his shoe shop to receive a general stock of boots and shoes. When he opens up he will have something to say to the public.

—Married, at East Jordan, on the 31st, by Rev. R. H. Whiteman, Mr. Jacob E. Chew, of this place, to Miss Lillie Bourjam, of East Jordan. The young couple will make Charlevoix their home.

—Will someone come in and kick us? We deserve it. Any journalist that will editorially recognize the Boyne Citizen as a newspaper, or its blockheadic scribbler as an editor, deserves an application of shoe-leather.

—The Catholic feast of Corpus Christi, or "shooting the devil," for the benefit of the Indians, occurred at Harbor Springs last Sunday. An Indian named Mitchell, from Horton's Bay, fell dead of heart disease.

—The cats of Petoskey are now taking their turn with the grippe. Almost every tommy and tabby in town is sick.—Petoskey Record. Would to Heaven the epidemic would reach Charlevoix with general and fatal effect.

—Visitors to the cemetery on Memorial day were, many of them, surprised to note the changes that have occurred there during the past year. The grounds have been greatly improved, and the many fine new monuments created.

—The Charlevoix Summer Resort party here today, consists of H. H. Everard, I. D. Bixby, S. A. Gilmore, and O. M. Allen of Kalamazoo and H. P. Parmelee of Hillsdale, Col. Dunbar the manager of the Belvedere is with them.

—Sammy Ross, a ten-year-old son of Andrew Ross, was playing with some other boys near the boom in the mill yard yesterday, when he fell in in such a place that he was hard to reach but young Archie McNeill, who was on the hill above, hearing the boys shouting, ran down to the shore, sprang into the water and brought the lad to shore. A brave act.

—The executive committee of the K. P. ball, requests the SENTINEL to state that the idea which is held by some that the party Friday evening, is a "full dress" affair is entirely erroneous. They say it is simply and wholly a plain every-day party, where the pleasure to be derived will be, not from the dresses worn, but from the other features incident to a select party, and a generous spread.

—Petoskey Record: Mr. Allek Rosential has purchased the bankrupt stock of Hunting & Parker, and his bills are out announcing that the stock will be forced off at bankrupt prices to make room for an entirely new and fresh stock. He has also leased the old White store, corner Lake and park, in which about June 10th he will open a large stock of dry goods and clothing, hats and caps which will be sold at bankrupt prices. He will leave on Saturday for Ship-stewaisa, Ind. to pack up his goods. The bankrupt law will be held here June 10th and 11th. Rev. Frederick Bagnall will preach the opening sermon. Everybody cordially invited to the meetings on Sunday and through the week.

Our school is now booming under the care of Louis Stewart formerly of Bellaire.

Mrs. John Cameron will start Tuesday for Hastings to visit her sister.

Phil Roach says he can lick any man just as cheaply as any other man.

Memorial Day.

The observance of Memorial Day at Charlevoix was a success in every particular. Although dusty roads made it somewhat unpleasant, the weather was fine.

Baxter Post, G. A. R., turned out in good force, as did also the W. R. C. and the school children. The attendance from surrounding points was large, and nothing occurred to mar the success of the occasion.

The address of Prof H. M. Face received words of praise from all who heard it. The music by a mixed quartette was appropriate and touching.

Tenderly the graves of the departed were strewn with the floral emblems of love and remembrance, and the last tribute—the military salute—closed the ceremonies at the cemetery.

—Petoskey Record: A few weeks ago the Charlevoix Sentinel had a sarcastic lump directed at the business men of Charlevoix, who, having secured a railroad, now sit down and hold their aprons out to catch the pieces of fortune. It was well written, and for the evident purpose an unkindly skit, and we took pleasure in copying it. To our amazement it has been taken seriously and literally by the country contemporaries of the Sentinel, who resent it as a slur on the other villages of the country. The understandings of these editors must be uncommonly dense.

Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

Will Franklin, formerly mate on the City of Grand Rapids, and later on the City of Charlevoix, will have commmand of the steamer Gazelle, to run in connection with the C. & W. M.

The Petoskey Dimocrat says that Captains Vandenhoef and Crysler have not yet consummated their arrangements for the purchase of a new boat and conducting the ferry business in partnership, but they will undoubtedly do so soon.

The steamer Hackley arrived from Muskegon Thursday, and is making regular runs between Charlevoix and Boyne City, touching at all intermediate points. She is all that has been represented, and should be kept here. She will make Sunday runs at half fare.

Charlevoix is an unlucky port for the schooner Fitzhugh. She now lies at Nicholls, Lewis & Bates dock, loading lumber for Cleveland. The last time she was here before was twenty years ago, when she was blown to an anchor about half way between the old dock and the north point, with her canvas in ribbons, and deeply laden with railroad iron. She hung on there ten days in one of the biggest gales on record, and had to get a wrecking tug. Sunday night last she lay alongside the schooner Seaman in this harbor. A misunderstanding arose between her mate and the captain of the Seaman, resulting in a "scrap." The Fitzhugh's mate languishes in the cabin with a broken leg.

LIVING AND LOVING.

[WITH MUSIC.]

I may live for years and dear,
That requires it but a day to pay
Which always the debtor owes;
Yet I know I shall not live long enough
To pay the debt I owe to you,
Where the heart's treasure outweighs all
Is happiness for those you cherish still
Can make or mar a life.

The tribute money glitters that pays
One debt, though's debtor's hopeless debt
Are tighter, dear than if we had Wealth's scepter in the world.
I'm not think fond lover on him
Who knows so much or so little
Because we never or as a shift
With single-hearted daughter.

There grows heart so poor but grows
If it but with a treasure
Richer than any clinks may over,
Richer than any rustling bank note
Can be poor and cold,
That hath and holds, faire gold,
Love's gracious self possesses.

Love wanderth deeply that measuring reach
Is fathom upon measure,
Its heights upon measure
This week, or day like a month,
A little minute, hours
Just as the right time gives,
Now, I am sure, this month of mirth
Been love a piece of Heaven

CHUB'S COMPANY WITH THE DEMOCRATS.

"Well, sarpent Bill Dawson, I reckon you gives it to me, and he may find a way to get unscalded out of the problem, for he may get off altogether. My Pizzle said he is a mighty smart man of Pine County. Then might mix them up enough and make them scatter out. Well, what do you propose, Mister Dawson?"

"Now, sense, you've got all you can do—look out. It won't hurt you to try and get another one, may as you can, or—what? If you have a chance of getting rid of the gang in confusion all he knows."

"Oh, that would be mighty fine, Mr. Dawson; don't usually back an offer twice."

"Don't sharp! Well, maybe you know your business, Mr.—"

"Well, call me Jim Black," said the stranger, in a low tone.

"What? Are you any kin to Mr. Black?"

"I ain't answer that now. Do just you what he said, and for the present, if you please, I make a gal."

"Well, Mr. Pizzle," with an emphasis on the name that brought a faint tinge to the traveler's cheeks, "that's all I've got to say."

"But you was going to put me on a place."

"Sell, sir! Now if you don't want to be in a hurry—"

"But I don't."

"Then you must be guided entirely by myself."

"Lightnin'."

"That's all. If you are ready to do as I say, meet me at the lower end of the town of Hard Times, on the road to Pine Cove."

"And what will you promise?"

"I promise on my honor as well you as you will be to assist me in the work every one of the gang—mind, all of them—in the penitentiary and in the Pine Cove County of the measure, lowest for that over from one to one."

"It's a bargain. I'll take my saloon with the pressure of time."

"There, there! If your word won't do your sovereignty of my account with me, Mr. Black," said Bill Dawson, "Mr. Chub says a thing she'll do it. Rely on Chub."

"You you may, Mr. Black," said Mr. Pizzle, frightened at the turn at fairs had taken.

"Well, I'm very much indebted to Chub, who proved her hand yesterday, when made a fool of myself, and I'm obliged to you, Mr. Dawson."

"Now, then, Chub, you can go indefinitely; you ain't right away—in the morning. I'm not think fond lover on him.

GIT THE MONEY.

The New York Evening Post, a rabid free-silver sheet, triumphantly stated a few days ago that all the stories of tin plate factories in this country were myths, for it had sent out its detectives and not down every announcement of a factory that it would hear of, only to find that it existed, it at all, in the imagination of some reporter. In another article the Post said: "We also are anxious to have the controversy settled, and for that reason are trying to find a factory. One medium sized factory working openly and selling its goods at a profit, would close our mouths." Having secured this generous concession from the Post, the New York press comes to the front and furnishes that paper with the following list of factories which had not been financial in its "investigation," the same of whom now have agencies in New York and stocks of plate on their own manufacture on the market. The firms are the St. Louis stamping company, United States iron and tin plate company, Lumaster, Cary, H. Leutmann & Co., Apollo Pa.; Norton Bros., Chicago, Ills.; Kirkpatrick & Co., Pittsburg; the Falcon iron and nail company, Akron, Ohio; the Cannonsburg iron and steel company, Pittsburg; Joseph Coran & Sons, Massillon, Ohio; the Britton rolling mill company, Cleveland, Ohio, and Marshall Brothers, Philadelphia.

From the list above given the Press takes the single firm of H. F. Lautmann & Co., Apollo, Pa., and challenges the Post to call its hard-knock detectives in, and send a gentleman to purchase rooling tin from the New York agents of Lautmann & Co., Messrs. H. U. De Mill & Co., 258 Water street. If it does this, and keeps its word, the Press declares that the Post's mouth will be forever sealed on American tin plate.

The Press does not, however, believe itself with the belief that the Post will either accept its challenge or keep its mouth shut, as promised; nor will its smaller imitators throughout the country, even though the Post should publish a sworn affidavit of its findings. They have declared that there is no tin plate made here, and it would be undemocratic to admit that they were mistaken.

Some of our prohibition friends are exceedingly wroth that the "people's party" should be called the "third party." They assert with some vehemence that they are the "third party" and that the "people's" organization shall be called the "fourth party." Perhaps they are right.

Don M. Dickinson is emphatically of the opinion that the Democrats will win in 1892. It will be remembered that Dickinson and Vilas had that issue view of things political in 1888, and promised Mr. Cleveland the vote of their respective state. But Michigan and Wisconsin went Republican just the same.

Mr. Gladstone is of the opinion that the system of protection adopted by the United States cannot stand, on account of its being with the other markets of the world. The recent protest of English manufacturers in relation to the operation of the new tariff law would indicate that our protective policy does not disable us altogether in competition with England.

The "squaw-book" legislature was to show the people of the State how to do business, by cutting down the length of the session to about half the length. They made a big noise about this matter. This was one of the ways they were to save the dear people's money. There had been too much time wasted in foolishness, you know, and it was to be stopped. Well we haven't heard much about it lately, for the present session already lacks but a few weeks of being as long as the longest on record.

It is now announced that an imperial decree has been issued remitting the sentence of two thirds of the Siberian prisoners in honor of the czarewitch's visit to that country. This is a fine example of justice in that most despotic of empires—Russia. If these men are to be liberated at the end of one person in order that the name of his son may gain lustre, it is only another evidence that these prisoners have been unjustly sent to Siberia by that very same god. It is not true that the prisoners do not deserve liberty, they probably do, but the real grounds on which they deserve to be liberated are not that the czar wills it any more than the just grounds of their punishment might have been that he willed it. But the Russian people and the world at large are too thoroughly cognizant of the true state of affairs to be caught by this old ear popularity.

THE FLOWER OF LUNA.

It Is Sensitive to Every Change of the Moon and Is Very Beautiful.

Mr. Arnold Dembworth, who owns, perhaps, the finest private botanical collection in the country, and whose greenhouses near Mount Sterling, Ky., are filled with the rarest and most delicate plants of all nations, is exhibiting with much pride a specimen of the Flower de Luna, the existence of which has often been doubted, but which was sent Mr. Dembworth a few months ago by a friend residing near Oryoba, Brazil.

It was obtained for him from an Indian, who found it growing in a swamp in the depths of the Amazonian forests, and is the only specimen which has ever reached this country alive. Those who have been favored by a glimpse of the curiously say it is a delicate, luscious vine, covered with small, glossy leaves of a bright and very tender green, climbing to a height of four or five feet, bearing here and there a milk white blossom of a dislike shape.

When the moon is at its first quarter, a distinct shadow or stain of a deep yellow, which seems rather in than on the flower and corresponding to the shape of the moon makes its appearance on this disk, and grows as the planet does, until, when it is in full area, the yellow stain covers the entire flower. As the moon begins to wane again this reticula in the same ratio, and finally disappears altogether to return once more as the new moon is seen to come back.

When the planet sets the flower closes and does not unfold until the moon rises on the following night. It process this course month after month whether placed in the open air or kept in a hot-house, though under the latter circumstances the yellow tint is much paler and more undecided, while the white surface takes on a dingy, unhealthy tinge. The plant seems almost entirely on air, its roots being barely covered with a little moist gravel.

Books in Chains.

In Europe, long before the days of printing, books were fastened to shelves or desks in libraries and churches, to guard against their being stolen, and also to prevent one scholarly gaining an unfair advantage over another by securing the use of a book from a too amiable librarian.

The libraries of the English universities were chained until the latter part of the eighteenth century, when, on account of the inconvenience of using them, the chains were removed. It is recorded that at King's college a man was paid £2 7s in 1775 for nine days' labor in taking the letters off the college books. According to the customs, there are, however, a few chained libraries still remaining in England, the largest of these is at the cathedral church of Hereford, and is the one genuine survival of an old monastic library. It consists of about 2,000 volumes, of which 1,500 are chained. There are five bookcases, and the remaining of two others.

The catalogue, which is also chained, classifies the books, many of which are in manuscript, in eight divisions, which chain is from three to four feet long, according to its position, so that every volume can be placed on the reading desk. In the center of these cases are wheels, which are useful in preventing their entanglement.

Hereford possesses the latest, as well as the oldest collection of chained books in the kingdom, the library of Christ's hospital, which was bequeathed to All Saints' church.

Detecting by the Thumb.

In China, a traveler wishing for a passport is requested to have the palm of his hand brushed over with fine colo[illegible] but this proof is held on this damp paper, which retains an impression of the lines. This is used to prevent transferences of the passport, as the lines of no two hands are alike. The cunning Chinese have also discovered that the impressions of no two persons' thumbs are alike, and also that the impression of no one person's two thumbs are alike.

The European police keep books of photographs to identify criminals; the Chinese police keep nicely impressions of each criminal's two thumbs carefully labeled and numbered. He may shave, he may wear a wig, he may paint himself dark or fair, he may separ young and lithe or old and crippled, but he cannot alter the impressions of his thumbs which can at any time be traced on paper and compared with the impressions always kept in safe custody by the celestial detective force.

The legislature of Maryland will be asked to consider soon a bill for an act to impose a tax upon bachelors. It will be a practical revival of a statute in force 100 years ago.

A Peculiar Custom.

"There is one very peculiar thing about the laws of the Isle of Man," says a writer in his Lunderlin Courier-Journal. "It is the only country in the world, so far as I know, except Ireland, which clings to the ancient measure of hundreds of years ago, of promulgating them from the top of the Thingwald hill, a mountain in the very center of the island. They must be read to the whole people from the Thingwald mountain, on the 5th day of July, before they are binding. Of course there are some special occasions, but the 5th day of July is the lawful day, and on this occasion each year 15,000 to 20,000 people assemble to hear the news read. This is another fact that is not generally known, I think, and is peculiar to the Isle of Man. For laws must be read in both the Manx and English languages.

To Cure a Cold.

1. Bathe the feet in hot water and take a glass of lemonade. Then sponge with hot water and remain in a warm room. 2. Bathe the face in very hot water every five minutes for an hour. 3. Snuff up the nostrils hot salt water every three hours. 4. Inhale ammonia or camphor. 5. Take four hours' active exercise in the open air. 6. Take a dose of quinine will usually break up a cold in the beginning. Anything tried will set the blood in active circulation will do it, whether it be drugs or the use of a blacksnake.

Brick in China.

The Chinese go to great lengths to establish brick yards in the empire, in order to rebuild most of the cities, whose houses are constructed almost wholly of wood. The frequent fires in these places shows invariably result in the destruction of thousands of buildings.

ECCENTRIC TOLSTOI.

His Home, His Toil, and His Daily Round of Life.

Count Leo Tolstoi rises, we hear, and receives his friends in his bedroom. It is an apartment some eight feet square without a carpet and always undertheated. In the corner stands an old green leather sofa, on which he sleeps with a single rug. Hitherto it quite unencumbered with a mattress, sheets or pillows. Near the sofa there is a pile of boot laces, sacks, knives, leather strips and all sorts of shoemaker's materials. Weaving machinery, half-finished clothes, pitchforks, picks and shovels lie in the wildest confusion all over the rest of the room, so that a stranger, suddenly set down in it would think himself in the quarters of a peasant, a weaver, and a shoemaker. The only thing to disturb his intellect in the occupiers of the humble attic would be a grand piano full of books, many in the most expensive bindings imaginable, but, with all his simple notions, Count Tolstoi is a bibliophile.

The philosopher's daily life is occupied with all sorts of duties which a man of letters is usually supposed not to discharge. He rises at 5 o'clock, and for half an hour then devotes cold water on his bared neck and breast. Then he draws on his clothes, which include only a blue checked jumper, of linen, a pair of trousers, and heavy ill-fitting peasant's boots. He never brushes his hair, and his apology for coming it is the thrusting through it twice all the fair fingers of his left hand.

At 6 o'clock he leaves his room for the dining room of the second floor. There the count's guests and scholars, of whom there is always a burdensome number at the disciple Polyan ought, are already assembled for tea. Their host never goes them in taking the great Russian beverage, however. He prefers coffee, two eggs, and a few brown fast cutlets or white bread fresh butter, cream, and a peculiar cheese which Tolstoi prepares with his own hands. Most of the breakfast party come and go from month to month. Three persons only are regular members of it year in and year out. They are the Countess Anna Michailowna and the count's two young daughters Xuleanda and Ljubiow (Love). The conversation at breakfast is light, even to the point of frivolity. The daily news, the domestic affairs of the village, and family matters at large are usually the subjects. Tolstoi chooses this style of topics, for he prefers to discuss his doctrine and his work only in his work-room.

He devotes the time between breakfast and noon to cleaning stoves, polishing stoves, mending boots, sleeping snow in winter, and other like manual labor. From 12 to 1 he dines. His dinner, as well as his 6 o'clock supper, consists of milk and lentil and the same sort of cheese and bread as his breakfast. Count Tolstoi chooses his earliest diet because he is vegetarian. He defends the opinion that man has no right to kill and consume a living organism. The lessons taught, he once asked Tolstoi, "is not the vegetable a living organism?" The count thought profoundly for several minutes, and then replied: "Well, to the science may help us to such an extent that we will not find it necessary to kill even a vegetable or an animal." From 1 to 3 o'clock, as Tolstoi receives the calls of scholars and gossips. He talks freely and deeply with all. He rarely plunges into a conversation of any length, however, without saying on his feet and his visitor two glasses of pungent kvas or like own brew. About Tolstoi's hours for writing are from 3 or 4 o'clock to 6. After supper he works at shoemaking for a little while or sews his family, then goes out of the "mujiks" trousers and boots, and crawls in between his dirty and green leather sofa for the night.

THE KOLA NUT.

Can It Be Made to Take the Place of Tea and Coffee?

A well-known medical journal is recommending the kola nut as a substitute for tea and coffee. The nut, it is said, contains little tannin and not much more caffeine. It is claimed that it will soon take the place of tea and coffee entirely.

A botanist, who has made a special study of the nut and its properties, said to a Cincinnati Times-Star reporter: "It is a mistake to say that the nut will take the place of tea and coffee. It has an astringent taste that is anything but pleasant, and I do not believe it will ever be used extensively, or at all in civilized countries. The kola nut is a native of the coasts of Africa, but has been introduced into and thrives well in the west Indies and Brazil. It grows on a tree 40 feet high, which produces yellow flowers spotted with purple. The leaves of the tree are six or eight inches long, and are pointed at both ends. The fruit consists of five long slender pods, inclosing from a common center. One of these when broken open is found to contain several nuts somewhat similar to tamarinds and of about the same size. The nuts are solid, being slightly softer toward the center than on the outside.

"The natives of the countries where the nuts grow use them for various purposes. They pass for money in Africa. They are used as a symbol of friendship and betroth the light colored ones signifying the former, and the dark the latter. They are supposed to aid digestion, and it is the practice to chew a small bit before eating a meal. They allay thirst, and if a piece be chewed and laid in the mouth while drinking, the most bitter and stagnant water can be taken, and will taste sweet and agreeable. I doubt if this quality of rendering stagnant water pure is possible by the nuts. I rather think that the astringent taste of the nut paralyzes the gustatory nerves momentarily, and for that reason the water is not tasted. Hunger they are also supposed to allay, but they do so more than paralyze the nerves. They have a stupefying effect, and when going on long marches the natives chew bits of the nuts continually, and with about the same effect as if intoxicating liquor had been used, though without the same bad results. Powdered kola nut is a specimen in cuts and wounds and has a healing effect.

"A chemical analysis of the nuts shows them to contain 20 parts of caffeine and but a fraction of a part of tannin. No, it will never be used to the place of tea and coffee. Its taste and chemical properties are against it."

FARMERS, READ THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any farm tool this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S.

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implements, have become acquainted with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we insure you at whatever effort, we have secured the best and latest improved machine with which to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and exclusive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better articles for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these propositions, and if you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place,

RAILROAD CHATTER.

Items of Interest on This Important Subject.

About fifty men are now at work on the grade just north of here, and the force will be increased to double that number as soon as possible. A camp has been established two miles north, and several loads of supplies were taken up Monday.

Attorneys Smith and Grover were here one day last week in consultation with certain of our citizens, but the nature of their business could not be ascertained.

General Manager Heald, Attorney Smith and Engineers McVean and Northrup are here to-day. All are reticent concerning their business, but it is thought to relate to the question of a depot site. The Directors of the Charlevoix Summer Resort Co are here in consultation with the railroad officials.

Chief Engineer McVean was asked this morning when the bridge would be built. He replied that he could give no information at present. He goes to Washington next week to secure the sanction of the government engineers, after which the Board of Supervisors of the county will be asked to pass upon the matter under the requirements of the State law.

THE PETOSKEY RUN.

Petoskey Democrat: Work has begun in earnest on this end of the C. & W. M. extension, although considerable trouble has been experienced in obtaining men. About a quarter of a mile of tramway is in operation, and the contractors state that they will use about two miles of this temporary track, and a hundred cars in working this contract. The track is laid along the line, up hill and down, and dirt cars are loaded on the elevations and run down and dumped in the fills, thus moving the dirt rapidly.

UNCLE DAVID AND THE T. AND A.

Cadillac Express: George L. Davis, was in Cadillac this week. George is now in the employ of David Ward, the millionaire land-owner, and thereby may hang an interesting incident. Mr. Ward is the owner of large tracts of land through which the Ossoo & Ann Arbor railroad will be compelled to pass if its plans for the Mackinac extension are carried out. Mr. Ward does not wish to grant the T. & A. management any courtesies, or to permit them to set foot on any portion of his land, until finally compelled to do so by the courts. To enable him to have greater advantage in protecting his property, Ward has had his own railroad incorporated, which has hitherto been a private enterprise, and the right of the T. & A. people to condemn his land and utilize his grade will not now exist. If any efforts are made on the part of the Ann Arbor road to forcibly push its extension through Mr. Ward's land, such as been successfully made by that road several times in the past, the builders will be met at the threshold of Mr. Ward's property by a defensive force under George L. Davis. There is a degree of enmity between Mr. Davis and the Ashleys which will give extra zest to the efforts of the former of David Ward's land, and that it will be an interesting and eventful contest, all who know the persons interested will admit.

Boyne City News.

Leroy Cram is able to be about again.

The John L. Green took a load of lumber Monday for Sheboygan, Wis., and the Florence Smith is loading slab wood for the same place.

The Lewis Boys and Mr. White are getting out piles for a new dock at Undine.

Mrs. John Wylie, of Cheboygan, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Margaret Willie, who is very sick.

No school last week or this on account of sickness.

Norwood Notes.

George. H. Van Pelt went to Manton Monday.

W. E. Campbell has taken quite a number of orders for Rand & McNally's atlas around here.

Prof. Kaufman was in town last week, and everything in the piano line is now in tune.

Mrs. John Seymour, of East Jordan, was in town for a few days last week.

Mrs. Willard Spaulding went to Elk Rapids Saturday for a visit among relatives.

The road warrants were made out last Thursday. Get to work Mr. Pathmaster.

Gilbert LeClair and Miss Gertrude Newell were married Saturday at the residence of Joseph LeClair, in Banks, by E. B. Marshall, Esq. Best wishes.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur B. Meech left Monday evening on the Lawrence for Chicago.

The band serenaded the Lawrence, Miss Frost, and the newly married couple Monday evening.

Resorters for the summer are now commencing to arrive, and if the country is filled to overflowing to George H. Van Pelt will be due much credit; for while here he writes hundreds of letters setting forth the beauties of Northern Michigan in general and Norwood in particular.

Saturday Wm. Harris sold Chicago gentlemen seventeen acres of land on the bluff overlooking the bay. Consideration, $255.

From Ellsworth.

Messrs. Nicholls, Fogg and Coulter of East Jordan are seen almost daily on our streets.

Henry Brown, of Atwood, spent Sunday with relatives here.

We understand that the Mobile building has been rented and will be used for a store.

Wm. Boss and Irwin Eaton have taken a contract for getting out ties for the railroad.

We hear distant rumblings that year to come nearer and nearer, of a great—Boom.

We understand that work on the Traverse City extension, commenced at Central Lake June 1st.

Here is another case where "Uncle Sam" got his penny. Some time ago the Auditor of the Post Office Dept. informed the Ellsworth Post Master of an error in his Postal account of Dec. 31, 1890 of 1ct. with orders to forwarded the same at once which was done and duplicate receipts received for same.

Boyne Citizen: A. J. Stroud and Conrad Schneider have put a ram into the Horton looking spring and now water is pumped all over town by it. A fine tank has been placed in front of Stroud's store and stocked with trout from the creek.

Four new brick blocks are going up in Manoedma. The sound of the hammer and the hum of industry are heard on every hand.

Elk Rapids is the most forward town in northern Michigan, because of the C. & W. M. extension, and a confident of being the biggest and best town in its section.

The editor of the Lewiston Republican says he is no kicker and won't find a word of fault even if the proposed line of the M. & N. E. R. R. will oblige him to cut 10 feet off the rear end of his office and turn his back yard into right of way for the convenience of the road.

The business men of Boyne City, at a public meeting, decided to organize a company to build and operate a chair factory. No little enthusiasm was shown and several citizens declared themselves willing to take from $1,000 to $5,000 of the stock. A committee was also appointed to look after the right of way for a rail road from this town through to Michigan Central via Thumb Lake, to open up a vast timber region.

Bellaire Review: Spencer Creek will be the only point on Torch Lake touched by the C. & W. M. railroad, and as a large and fine section of country is tributary and will make Elle Creek its railroad town, that place will develop into a good sized village. Five years from now will see Spencer Creek with more population than Mancelona, is the belief of many Bellaire people.—As the railroad is not going to Cameron Bros. at Torch Lake, Cameron Bros. will come to the railroad—; the wisdom of building another large saw mill either at Central Lake, Snowblake Bay or Spencer Creek.——Tom Jordan can have a spur from the C. & W. —Revs. Norris, Miller and Van Anken will attend the meeting of the Cheboygan Association here this week, and ministers and delegates. The meeting opens with a sermon by the Rev. Fredrick Bagnall.

—In our article last week on Memorial Day services, we innocently did Hon. S. H. Green an injustice. We could not attend the services at the cemetery, and was not informed that Major Green divided the honors with Prof. Hine in the delivery of the Memorial addresses—each speaking ten minutes. There is no more conspicuous figure in the ranks of the Grand Army of Northern Michigan, than Major Edward H. Green, and his modesty enhances his merit. If there is in the list of those who were the blue a man entitled to the salute of the patriot, that man is E. H. Green.

—Mr. Gagnon has opened the "New Charlevoix" (the Upright House) and is ready to receive boarders. The house has been thoroughly renovated and refurnished, and is most pleasantly located. It cannot fail to become a popular stopping place.

—Fires have been raging fiercely north of Charlevoix the past week. Fires started along the railroad right-of-way was the cause of the trouble, the flames ran through the woods as far as Moses Cooper's destroying about 1,000 pieces of cedar for Mr. Cooper, got out for farther.

—Remember that the tickets to the commencement exercises can be obtained at Calkins & Warne's after 9 o'clock Monday morning. The number of tickets is strictly limited to the capacity of the hall, and when those are taken, no more can be issued. Reserve coupons can be secured for 10c fee to cover expenses. Children of the schools should obtain tickets of their teachers.

—Matters at Ironton have begun to take on an appearance of activity. Mr. Holden, the new superintendent, has arrived from Chicago, and preparations are in progress for re-building the furnace. It is also quite certain that chemical works will be added to the plant. The company last week bought the quarter section of railroad land this side of Young America point, paying $1,000 for it.

—The legislature has passed the bill creating a new judicial circuit, composed of the counties of Emmet, Manitou, Cheboygan and Mackinac. On Friday last Gov. Winans appointed Hon. Chas. J. Faulkner to the Judgeship of the new circuit. The people of Northern Michigan, irrespective of party will rejoice in this appointment. Mr. Faulkner is an able and upright man and will make an able and upright Judge.

—The following is the School report of District No. 6, Township of Marion, for the month ending May 29th: Whole number of pupils enrolled, 11; average daily attendance, 8. Average standing of pupils, viz: Sophronia McLaughan, 95; Agnes O'Neil, 96; Grace Stevens, 96; Mabel Stevens, 95; Mattie Miller, 95; Fanny Miller, 91; Hughie O'Neil, 92; Maggie O'Neil, 90; Johnie Walker, 85; Effie Miller, 88. Cora Mills, Teacher.

—Postmaster Berdan has recorded the many different ways in which Charlevoix is spelled, and hands us the list. Charlyoix, Charlevoix, Charcoix, Scharleyoix, Shadevoix, Charlevoix, Charlievix, Charlievrx, Charlevoyx, Chiarvoix, Cheselevoix, Charlievoy, Charlisoix, Scharlevoix, Charlecoixe Charlevoxa, Shaileyoxe, Cheboygan, Scharlyvoix Charlevoyx, Charlesavoye, Chrlevoix, Charvellah, Charlivoix, Charslevoix, Charlesoix, Scharlevoixe, Charlevoixe, Charlevoix, Shellavoy, Sharles Ioee, Challboix, Charlotvoxe, Charlievioxe, Charlesvoxes, Charleval, Charlieoix, Charlesoix, Sallsenoocks, Scharleyoye.

—Boyne Citizen: Geo. W. Bailey attended a meeting of the Superintendents of the Post at Ironton, the beginning of this week. The tender of Mr. Tuttle, of Ironton, for boarding and caring for the county poor, at $1.75 per week per head, was accepted. The furnishings for the building arrived Monday from Milwaukee and Sheboygan. The furniture is all good and substantial, hardwood bedsteads with woven wire springs, and everything necessary for the comfort of the inmates. The house has been painted, kalsomined and put in a good shape generally.——The Malcoh case was finally settled last week by the Insurance Co. paying Mr. Malcoh the full amount of the judgment given him together with the costs of the case.

—Our old friend Will A. Norton is, like Alexander, seeking for more worlds to conquer. On Memorial Day, he was the orator at Napoleon, Ohio, where Sam Thatcher lives. The Napoleon News says: "The exercises at the Cemetery grounds could not have been improved. The address of William A. Norton, of Michigan, was decidedly the most elegant and best delivered of any ever made on a similar occasion in this county. While here, Mr. Norton, who is a very sociable, genial and companionable gentleman, was the guest of Col. Thatcher, Mine Hostess of the Union House, by whom he was most royally entertained. He was taken in a carriage through a portion of our county and left Monday morning expressing himself most favorably impressed with our town, county and people.

Gossip For the Marines—Matters of Interest Here and Elsewhere.

The steamer Gordon blew out her cylinder head Wednesday, and is laid up for repair.

The dredge has completed the lower channel, and there is now a depth of fourteen feet between the pier ends, and thirteen feet will be dredged from there to Pine Lake.

Inspector Collier arrived last week, and, with a force of six men has begun the repairs on the harbor revetment, and the placing of the brush-matresses. A steam pile-driver will be here in about two weeks.

On Wednesday of last week the schooner Topsey, owned by C. A. Barker, and sailed by Capt. Raber, laden with cedar, and riding at anchor in a heavy sea at Sand Bay, Beaver Island, "broke her back" and foundered. Capt. Raber put her on the beach, where she was stripped and left a total wreck. Loss about $2,000.

High School Commencement.

The schools close this week for the summer vacation. The commencement exercises of the High School will be held at Lewis Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening next. The class of '91 consists of consists of Misses Pearle Dartt, Maggie Green and Katie Smith. These young ladies are so well known in our midst as to make it sure that the keen interest which has heretofore been felt in these gatherings will be fully maintained this year. They have taken high rank in scholarship, and, both by native talent and their industry in their school work, they are prepared to take conspicuous places in the world of the high school.

Our citizens should unite in making this commencement season an enjoyable one for all concerned. By so doing we shall not only honor the class, whose perseverance to the end fully deserves such marks of appreciation, but, what is even more, we shall intensify the public interest in education, which goes so far to make our public school successful.

A sufficient number of tickets will be issued to furnish all who can be conveniently accommodated in the hall. According to the custom heretofore adopted these tickets will be given free to those who call for them at the appointed place. They will be ready for distribution at Calkins & Warne's at 9 o'clock a. m. Those who wish to reserve seats can get a reserve coupon for a fee of ten cents. No more tickets will be issued than the capacity of the hall, and those not desiring to reserve seats will have tickets free.

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE CONVERSATIONS WHICH CAME AS IN A DREAM TO CHUB.

As the sun was sinking behind the forward and straight the man—John Kenly's face was turned toward me.

"Dear," he said, "you look as brown," said he, "as the Indian girl."

"I don't mind it I also."

Hawk looked up from the fire and he shoot many times.

"Dear?" he said. "What does this mean, Chub?"

"Yes, you see for yourself—dad."

Hawk, still grasping her long waists, glanced at the man long and intently.

"Why, my! it isn't Hawkins—the man as calls Hawk's back."

"I reckon he's just pretty bad."

Chunkind came to the fire and assisted him to a sitting posture. Hawk sat up, leaning against a tree, with his head from shoulder, and looked inquiringly at Hawk Dawson.

By this time half a dozen of the men and women had collected back from the fire. Hawk's son, an intimate and a fellow, stood looking on.

"Why, don't you know?" said Hawk Dawson.

"No, not exactly—I've been a dab—said Chub.

"Dears as if we didn't know where he lived—said Chub.

"Dreadful—said Chub pointing to the man—he's a—he's a—he's a—he's—Trouble can tell you. If he doesn't, I'll tell."

Once indeed sidewalk the ground as Hawk Dawson, the man, John Kenly, got over and bended his hands behind him as—said—

Mr. Hawk and women—standing before—Mr. Hawk Dawson—said—he—"I didn't—there was any—no—no—I was only—Mr. Hawk Dawson—I—I—I Charlevoix Sentinel.

Established 1880.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

CHARLEVOIX, JUNE 19, 1891.

The new party can point with pride to at least one thing, and that is the fact that it is being bitterly assailed by John F. St. John.

Our difficulty which boasts the so called People's party is the fact that the people didn't ask for it, don't recognize it and won't support it.

Mr. Hinne is rapidly convalescing, and there is plenty of money in the Treasury—two things that are decidedly to the disadvantage of the Democratic party.

A leading trade paper presents a table showing that the prices of cotton cloth are from 20 to 33 per cent lower than they were a year ago. This may not be due to the McKinley tariff act.

The Democratic leader would be glad to dodge the silver questions next year, but the Southern and Western section of the party won't stand any such cowardice and hypocrisy.

The people's party will not be worth quite so much to the Democracy as the Prohibitionists were, but its leaders will look for big subsidies from the Democratic National Committee just the same.

The shams which England manufactures over the reciprocity policy of this country indicates that the Democrats' friends on the other side of the Atlantic despair of Democratic chances for victory next year.

It is true, as Mr. Ingalls says, that the Republican party can not expect to win votes on "sentiment and emotions," nor is their any reason to believe that it will try to do so. The situation is a very plain one, and the battle will be fought with a due regard for all new issues of real interest and importance.

The Democratic press is at present engaged in a desperate attempt to create an impression that the reports in regard to the establishment of the tin plate industry in this country under the protective clause of the new tariff law are political fabrications circulated for the purpose of cloaking the so-called "infamy" of the "McKinley bill." The New York Times directs its office by a merchant of tonnage to take 6,000 tones of American tin, and asserts that there are no tin establishments to accept it, despite the numerous reports in regard to the construction of tin plates in various parts of the country. The object of these tin-hanging Democrats is to bring about snap judgment among the people as to the tariff and its manufactures. The campaign of misrepresentation last fall was so successful that they have been led to hope that they will be able to again pull the wool over the eyes of the people. But the new tariff law is slowly but surely working out its own vindication, and when the tin manufacturers have fairly established their new plants it will be dangerous for Democratic journals to repeat their charges of the present, and risky for merchants to bluff offers to take big blocks of tin plate.

Northern Michigan News.

The T. & A. railroad folks intend to build from Traverse City.

Since Eli Kappen is to have a railroad, the town is putting on city airs and wants a park.

They are already talking about removing the County Seat from Bellaire to Spencer Creek, in Antrim Co.

And now the Cheboygan folks have Constable & Sons located there for headquarters of their fishing operations.

Hugh Hankin of St. Ignace purchased what was considered a worthless Montana mine and is making a fortune from it.

Judge J. G. Blanchard is authority for the statement that all fruits crops will be good, except apples, in the Grand Traverse region.

Traverse City will be a first class postoffice after July 1, and will be the only one in that section of Michigan. There are only 27 in the state.

A Cheboygan man in Court the other day swore that he did not know his wife's first name, although they had been married 15 years. He always called her 'wild woman."

East Jordan Enterprise: Mr. Gill-Martin of Charlevoix, a practical cigar maker invented the building recently erected by Dr. L. S. Bartlett and will open at once a first class cigar factory and we bespeak him success here.

Petoskey Record. The new Cheboygan railroad is named the "Cheboygan and East Michigan." It will be built from Levering to Rainy Lake, and is intended to cut across the G. R. & I., the C. & W. M., and all other roads that steer for Mackinaw.

Addendum. The inland route for the extension of the C. & W. M. railroad has been decided upon, and work is being prosecuted all along the line. The Williamsburg and Barker Creek people, and in fact everybody along the road are jubilant. Barker Creek will be the nearest point to Kalkaska, about nine miles distant. A town will be platted there, probably by County Treasurer Hocken.

Corpus Christi was observed at Harbor Springs Sunday by the Indians. It was "big Sunday" for them, and a large number were there to celebrate. They commenced arriving on Saturday and come from Northport, Horton's Bay, Mancelona, Petoskey, Hurt Lake and Cross and Middle Villages Sunday. The streets were literally swarming with Indians. The usual ceremonies were observed at the Catholic church.

Bellaire Bugle: Our railroad, in passing through Elsworth, crosses land owned by Chas. S. Campbell. Mr. Campbell thinks it will damage him to the amount of two thousand dollars. The railroad officials do not look at it that way. Sheriff Stewart will summon jurors, and on Tuesday, June 16, before the Probate Court, six good men and true will settle the difference of opinion. The same course will probably be taken with a few other descriptions.

"A few miles from Sault Ste Marie, George Lee, a farmer claims to have discovered gold. A fortune teller, named Mr. Smith told him that he would dig under a big boulder lock of his farm he would find signs of gold at a depth of 40 feet and great quantities of the precious ore at 100 feet. The neighbors get excited and a big crew of men was put to work. At 40 feet, Lee claims to have found good specimens of gold. The neighbors claim that they know for years of the existence of auriferous rock in the vicinity.

Torch Lake, in Antrim county, is one of the largest and finest bodies of water in northern Michigan, with immense tracts of timber and fine country tributary to it. Spencer Creek, a little village on the eastern bank, near the southern extremity, is the only town on the lake touched by the Traverse City Petoskey extension of Chicago & West Michigan, and it is predicted the road will draw nearly all the resources of the Torch lake country to Spencer Creek and make it a town of no inconsiderable proportion within a few years.

Petoskey Record. The committee engaged in securing right of way through the village is not having a very easy time of it. The question of riparian rights has been raised, and it is more than probable that some property owners will have their ideas enlarged as to their rights below low water mark. The reason why their ideas become confused is because the law of riparian rights as applied to rivers and inland lakes is not applicable to navigable waters.—Judge Severens rendered a decision in the case of Mary Oberstaller against Hiram G. Hoyt and James W. Ten Eyck, in favor of the defendants. While there were only about ten acres involved in the suit, still the decision affected the title to all the land from which Harbor Point, Harbor springs, Bay View and part of Petoskey are now situated.

This is what you ought to have, in fact, you must have it, to fully enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had for all. We guarantee that Electric bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you good digestion and oust the demon dyspepsia and install anepsy instead. We recommend Electric Bitters for Dyspepsia and all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Kidneys. Sold at 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle by F. G. Hines & Co., Druggists. 4.

Pronounced Hopeless, Yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hood, of Cookie, S. C., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent loved ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and I thank God I am now a well and hearty women. Gave my trial bottles free, and I gave a dozen. Regular size, 50 cents and $1.00. 4

JAPANESE ROYAL OUTING.

Rules for the People When the Emperor and Empress Travel.

"It is a great day for Kyoto," writes a contributor in the English Illustrated Magazine, describing the former Capital of Japan; "for the descendant of the gods has brought his wife and himself to the neglected Capital of its ancestors, at which humble condescension a faithful Tokyo newspaper says: 'It is indeed, no wonder that the rains are so heavy this spring when a descendant of the sun leaves his pedestal and travels through his realm as an ordinary man.'"

However, he is making himself popular in Kyoto, and his consort is to-day to pass through the streets on her way to shed the light of her countenance on two other ancient Capitals of DaiNippon—Osaka and Nara. And our democracies, if they will conform strictly to the regulations posted everywhere, are to be allowed a passing glimpse of her Majesty.

Her Majesty will visit Osaka about the 23d. She will stay at Nara two days, at Takaramono one day, and Yoshino one day. The following regulations are proclaimed for the guidance of the people while her Majesty is passing through this city:

First—When her Majesty shall pass alone, no one is allowed to look at her from the frame built on houses for the drying of clothes, or through the cracks in the doors, or from any position in the upper parts of their houses.

Second—If any one wishes to see her Majesty, he or she must sit down at the side of the road along which her Majesty will pass. All children must be taken particular care of lest they play in the road and so obstruct the passage of her Majesty through the street.

Third—No one must look at her Majesty without taking off his hat, neckcloth, or turban, or whatever else he may be wearing on or about his head; moreover, no one must lie staring while he or she is looking at her Majesty, nor must any one carry a stick or cane. Only women wearing foreign clothes will be allowed to retain their head covering.

Fourth—Although it may rain, no person will be allowed to put up an umbrella while her Majesty is passing.

Fifth—Dogs must not be allowed to wander on to the road by which her Majesty will pass.

Sixth—Until the passage of her Majesty the route by which she will come will be kept free of all carriages and jinrikishas. The roads would in this will take must be completely free of all traffic.

Seventh—As her Majesty passes no one must raise his voice, nor must any raise he board. When her Majesty reaches the station there will be a discharge of fireworks.

The Afterbirthum Tonic.

Three or four of us on the car were talking about Gen. Sherman's death and, as might have been expected, one of the grumbly individuals that he was with the immortal General on his famous march to the sea. There was a woman in the seat ahead, surrounded by bundles and baskets, and evidently going somewhere on a visit. The war talk soon stirred her up, and she turned to the veteran and queried:

"Mister, you kin't be a rebel?"

"Yes'm."

"Bend upon all mischief?"

"Yes'm."

"Wounded crying for water?"

"Yes'm."

"Bombshells and cannon balls falling around you like hail?"

"Yes'm."

"And you didn't run?"

"No'm. I should hope not," he modestly replied.

"Good right there and never got scar on you?"

"Yes'm."

"Well, now, I don't believe it!" she bluntly exclaimed. "It ain't human nature. It ain't accordin' to things."

"I hope you do not doubt my word, madam."

"Yes, I do!" she sharply replied. "I don't believe you have got any more nerve than my Sam has, and Sam can't stand the test."

"Then you have a test?"

"Yes, I have. You just get off at Scottdale, where I am going to stop. There'll be a wheelbarrow somewhere around there and you just stand off about thirty feet and let me bear down on you with it. If you don't jump or dodge or climb a telegraph pole I'll give in that you are the bravest man I ever saw!"

"I'm afraid I haven't time to stop off," he stammered.

"I knew you wouldn't have," she dryly replied. "They seldom do. They talk about bombshells and dead men and almighty peas, and they make out that they charged up to the roaring cannon, for the minute I talk about barrow they knuckle. You needn't say no more. You've stirred."

And he hadn't another word to utter.—N. Y. Sun.

Her Royal Sweetness.

To be called her Royal Highness is the destiny of every woman born to wear a crown, writes Lady Elizabeth Hilary in The Ladies' Home Journal, but it remains for one woman among all the royal families to have the enchanting title of Her Royal Sweetness given to her, and that honor belongs to Alexandra, Princess of Wales. She is as marvelous art of making goodness seem attractive, of making the right set the pleasant one and of impressing upon all who know her the knowledge that to do good is to have a pleasant time, and not to do it is to miss some of the pleasure of life. Many princesses have been written about as having been beautiful, as having caused great wars, as having drawn a fortune of pearls of value, of having made one die for love and kingdoms quarrel over them, but of none of them can it be said, as it is of this gracious lady, that the whole world bows down before sweetness and goodness that peace has been the watch-word of her life—and not only does she value peace, but those loving sisters, Faith, Hope and Charity abide with her.

After Half a Century.

Two ladies met in Portland, Me., recently who had not seen each other for fifty-seven years. After mutual congratulations and a hearty sounding up of the experiences of over half a century since they last met, one of them recollected that at that last meeting she borrowed 50 cents of her friend, which she had never before had an opportunity to return. The lender had no recollection of the circumstance, but the borrower insisted upon payment of principal and interest.

There are $5,820,000,000 of coined silver and $5,737,000,000 of coined gold in the world.

FARMERS, READ THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any farm tool this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S.

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implements, have become acquainted with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we assure you at whatever effort, we have secured the best and latest improved machine with which to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and extensive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better articles for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these propositions, and if you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place.

BROOKLYN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION PARADE.

NINE SEVENTY THOUSAND TOTS AND GIRLS WALK—THE OLD "CHICKEN COOP" WITH BANDS AND THE STREETS FILLED WITH SPECTATORS.

THOUSANDS IN LINE.

Annual Parade of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union Parade.

ALL FAMILIES WAS ALMOST DESERTED, and the streets were thronged with people from Bedford, Williamsburg, Greenpoint, Bushwick, Ridgewood, Flatbush and Gravesend, and from other of the City Brooklyn Sunday school children, numbers estimated at Fifteen thousand. William H. Wanamaker, ex-President Harrison, Chauncey M. Depew and other speakers were present at the reviewing stand on the Lafayette and Gates avenue entrances to the Tabernacle, and delivered addresses to the assembled children.

COMING TO THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE, and the Sunday School Union, the children had to hang for several hours prepared for the exercises, which were in charge of Deputy Superintendent, assisted by the Superintendent of the Sunday School Department, who, assisted by a corps of marshals, who wore rosettes, arranged the order of the parade.

THE DEPOT.

The Site Finally Selected—The North Side Gets the Plum.

Although without doubt the location of the C. & W. M. depot site for Charlevoix was settled several months ago, not until last week was official action taken.

General Manager Heald and Attorney Smith were here Friday, and after looking over the grounds on both sides of the river, and consulting with our business men and the Directors of the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association, located the grounds on the north side, at the foot of the Chicago Resort street, on the left.

Cessions of land for side-tracking, etc., were secured from Amos Fox and J. E. Dixon.

There is a difference of opinion among our people on the subject, and there is some disappointment that it was not located at the foot of Newman street, on the south side. We think, how ver, that the site selected possesses advantages that will become apparent as time passes. The south side Resort Association are satisfied with the location. They will be given a passenger station, with waiting-room and package-freight building.

Mr. Heald assures our people that Charlevoix will be given depot facilities equal to those of any point on their extension.

DUTY IS PLEASING.

Twenty teams and 150 men are at work on the Charlevoix end of the Petoskey - Charlevoix section, and the force will be increased as quarters can be secured for them.

Dick Bassett, the Grand Traverse hermit, has been made happy. He served throughout the war with a western regiment, and with great gallantry. He was several times wounded in battle, and to this day carries three or four rebel bullets around in his body. During his wanderings after the war he lost his papers, and was not able to prove up his claim for a pension. This did not worry him particularly, as the fish of Traverse Bay and the product of his island home are sufficient for his purposes. Last fall the interesting story of his life was told to the News, together with a description of his hermit home and mode of living. The paper fell into the hands of the captain of the company in which Bassett served during the war. The captain lives in the east, and remembering him as one of the boys he opened communication with the hermit. The correspondence has resulted in Bassett getting a pension, with a goodly sum of arrears, the captain being able to furnish the missing links in the chain of evidence required at the pension office.

TITLES OF NOVELS.

The Right of Authors to Quarry for New Names in Poetry.

The average novel, the outsider gathers, is a better-paying concern than the average poem, says the St. James Budget. And that, no doubt, is why there is so much more fuss about proprietary rights in the titles of novels. If you feel so inclined you may go on singing and sonneteering "To Delia" and "To Chloe" to your heart's content, but if you desire to romance about some "not impossible she" you will be well advised to avoid putting "She" upon your title-page. Yet there is decorum in these matters.

And personally one is inclined to think that Edward Ray was unwise to write "The Worst of It" over his lines in Lippincott's Magazine. The phrase was all the world's once. Now you shall hardly hear it uttered in the most different context without a wave of reminiscence of the passionate self-abandonment of the guilty husband of the guilty wife in Browning's poem. And the worst of it is that Mr. Ray's subject seems to be his name.

The right of novelists, on the other hand, to quarry for titles in the mines of poetry is well established by custom. Any novelist may take "Proud Maisie's" name in vain or degrade "Airy Fairy Lilian" into some "Easy Breezy Caroline" in three volumes of prose travesty. Mr. Jay is well entitled—by custom—to write a thrilling shilling book and call it "Mesmerism," or a novel of Hotswian introspection and call it "Le Byron de Nos Jours," or an erotic study after Mr. Salius and call it "A Light Woman." Poets have been known to protest, but they are a little old-fashioned up on Parnassus. When, in her habitation, the loyal Primrose Dame is asked if she has read "Endymion" she naturally answers, "Yes." But it is Keats' poem that the little denizen is the republic of letters still.

Mr. Stevenson stole the title of his volumes of verse from Ben Jonson's "Underwood," and a very pretty title it is. Mr. Stevenson acknowledged the theft in the handsomest manner:

"If at my verse, like not a single line,
Thou like my title, for it is not mine.
If the title pleas, a better pays I make;
Ah, how much better had I stolen the whole!"

—because, of course, there is no copyright in Ben Jonson. It is to be feared that but few of Mr. Stevenson's readers were much bothered by reminiscences of Rare Ben.

Trick Dogs.

Taking everything together, I think the poodle is the best adapted for tricks of any breed of dogs. Still I have seen mongrels that could perform marvelous feats with grace and ease. For summersaults the compactly built terrier is probably the best breed of dogs. I once knew an artist who had a French poodle of wonderful sagacity. It lived with him in his studio, and was taught to go to the door when the postman came, and take the letters from his hand and deliver them to its master. One day the door-bell rang, and when it was opened, a messenger boy came in instead of the expected letter-carrier. Without showing the least temper the poodle sprang against the swinging door, and by its weight slammed it in the face of the astonished boy. It appears that once a messenger boy offended the poodle, and he took this method of ridding the studio of his presence.

Some dogs have a wonderful lung of locality. This is more developed in some dogs than in others, and those that possess it to a marked degree can easily be taught tricks in fetching and carrying that would almost seem miraculous. I have known of a dog going out hunting with his master, they went a distance of more than one hundred miles from home. While they were there the master lost his dog, and went home without him. A day later he truant made his appearance. He had boarded a train and ridden home. I myself have lost my dog in Jersey City, and he has got on a ferry-boat by himself, and come home without losing in way or being helped.

A word or two of good advice to conclude. Do not begin training your dog to do tricks until he is ten months or a year old. After you have taught him one trick, go on to another, but not before he has mastered it thoroughly. In rehearsing him in his tricks, always observe the same order. Do not begin with jumping to-day, and with standing up and walking tomorrow. Be orderly and precise, and so also will your dog be.—H. Clay Glover, in Harper's Young People.

Interesting Figures.

A BIG DEAL

The Dixon Farm Bought By a Grand Rapids Syndicate.

Last week a deal was consummated here whereby the Dixon farm in this Township, passed into the hands of a syndicate composed of certain Grand Rapids gentlemen and Joseph R. Dixon, the party of the first part, who retains a half interest in the corporation. Mr. Wm. Alden Smith made the deal when here last week. The purchase price of the property was $20,000.

The property consists of all that portion of the Dixon estate not owned by John S. Dixon or platted into the Village addition. The purchase embraces 55 acres, and includes the Dixon residence.

The farm is on the line of the railroad, overlooks Pine Lake, and is in close proximity to the depot grounds. Although details cannot at this time be given, enough is known to warrant us in stating that the property was bought for hotel and resort purposes, and that behind the project stands prominent C. & W. M. officials, who purpose making it the most beautiful resort in Northern Michigan. Large expenditures will be made on the grounds next season.

Mr. Dixon will continue in the dairy business, and has already secured an option on a farm in this township.

Later—As we go to press we learn that the matter of Mr. Dixon retaining an interest in the property is yet uncertain.

—Jos. Hyland has just put in a spark arrester and smoke burner in Nicholls, Lewis & Bates mill that works perfectly.

—The Ladies' Riding Club announce a ride to Twin Lakes to-morrow (Thursday) morning. Members be prepared for the bus.

—An excursion party of Lake City, Cadillac and Manistee (old fellows) was here Friday, and were shown about the town by our boys.

—Mrs. John Harmon, formerly of place, arrived here from Sterling, Mich., yester day with her daughter, Mrs. H. S. Way. She is very ill.

—Baker & son are building a 22x60 warehouse, two stories high, for agricultural implements. Their increasing trade made it necessary.

—Rev. C. F. Van Auken, state evangelist, will hold a meeting at the Ironton Congregational church tonight and probably on Thursday and Friday nights.

—Miss Nettie Hawks, teacher in the Elk Rapids schools, arrived in town Sunday, and will remain here this summer, the guest of her cousin, Mrs. W. A. Smith.

—Old fogyism will kill any town. No town can prosper that does not grasp its opportunities promptly. It wants energy, public spirit and liberality to make a live town out of a dead one.

—The Hoyne Citizen of last week remarked that the furniture for the poor house came from Milwaukee and Sheboygan. The editor was fully aware that the furniture was bought of S. M. See & Son's, of this place.

—The Children's Day Exercises at the Ironton Congregational Church last Sunday afternoon were well planned and carried out. The singing and the speaking in the midst of many flowers, was worth going miles even in a hot day to see. The offering amounted to $10.00.

—Miss Bailey, who has so ably assisted Prof. Enos in the high school the past year, goes to Petoskey next year as assistant preceptress.

—Rev. Van Auken preached a good practical sermon here last Sunday morning, and the pastor baptized four little children. In the evening Children's Day was observed, with a varied program, and a fine display of flowers. The offering amounted to $14.25, given to aid the missionary Sunday School work.

—Rev. C. F. VanAuken, the Congregational state Evangelist, arrived in town Saturday and preached at the Congregational church Sunday morning. Mr. VanAuken was for several years the Congregational pastor here and to his energetic labors the Society are indebted for their fine place of worship. He will remain here several days.

—Andrew Webb claims that time ago, on Antrim street, between Bridge and State streets, he fell through a hole in the side-walk and broke his shoulder. At the last meeting of the council he put in a claim of $500 damages, and proposes to push it. If. W. Kane is his attorney. Mr. Webb will be well-footed before he gets that half thousand.

—County Surveyor Robinson, of Hoyne Falls, arrived last evening to plat a sixteen acre addition to the village of Charlevoix, for the Mason estate. The plat lies on the north terrace between the Bridge street extension, and the county road, and is destined to be one of the most desirable localities in the village for building lots.

—The fires in Hayes, that ran through the town from the railroad right-of-way have been very disastrous during the week. The flames were driven across the State road, and on Sunday morning destroyed Burgess' shingle and saw mill on Oyster Bay. This is the fourth time Mr. Burgess has been burned out. It is reported that the railroad company will be called upon to pay damages.

—Mr. Fred. A. Dean, of Charlotte, the bright young Democratic Statesman, who came so near being Governor of Michigan when Williams was nominated last fall, was in town last week. Mr. Dean is a son-in-law of Hon. A. E. Mather, so well known here. While here Mr. Dean effected the sale of the Mather property, beyond Dixon's, at the foot of Pine Lake, to E. H. Harris, of Norwood. Consideration, $1,800.

—A man named Ashland, from the vicinity of Norwood "went to sleep" Saturday in the back room of Richards' saloon, and was relieved of his watch. Alick Machesha averred that he saw a railroad laborer named Burke take it. Burke was arrested on the street that afternoon and locked up over Sunday. Monday, before Justice McLeod, the jury disagreed. A second trial resulted, and a verdict was reached that there was a lack of evidence to convict, and the prisoner was discharged. Ashland is out a watch and Charlevoix county is out several dollars of good money.

What Shall It Be?

The destiny of any town is in its own hands. It may by its own unconcern decree a perpetual condition of coma, and pass into ancient history along with Memphis, Troy and Hoyne City, or it may by its energy rise to importance and prosperity.

If there ever was a critical period in the history of Charlevoix it is now. There are before us two propositions: Shall we avail ourselves of the grand opportunities brought to our doors, or by our negligence let them pass to others? Shall we live or die?

The great essential for which we have so long waited is here, and we have only to act and the fruits will come to us in abundance.

Manufacturing industries are ready to come but we must meet them half way. We must think less of individual gain and more of the public good; we must bury jealousies and promote a spirit of enterprise; we must put our hands in pockets and give according to our means, to the cause of Charlevoix!

A railroad may be made a medium of magnation or it may be made a source of prosperity. Everything is in our favor. What shall be our destiny?

Every citizen of Charlevoix must pull himself out of the rut, and contribute to the common cause of the good of CHARLEVOIX!

—John denHykes and son Paul of Kalamazoo arrived today for a short stay on business.

FIFTH OF 91M.

A Quartette of Young Ladies of the High School Receive Their Diplomas Last Evening.

It was a proud event for the class of 1891 of the Charlevoix High School, at Lewis Grand Opera House last evening, and it was no less so to the school patrons and the school faculty. The house was filled to its utmost capacity. The stage was tastefully arranged and elaborately decorated with plants and flowers, the class motto, "More Beyond," forming a portion of the back setting.

Misses Carrena Williams, Pearle Dartt, Maggie Green and Kate Smith, are the young ladies who, after their years of faithful application, have reached the highest standard attainable in their school. They bore their honors and contributed to their portion of the exercises bravely, modestly and creditably. Miss Kirwin, and Misses Winnie Bartholomew, Mamie Seys, Artie Kanagy, Ethel Newman and Clara Aimlie, rendered vocal selections that were equally creditable.

The address of the occasion was delivered by Superintendent Catton, of Kalkaska. Prof. Catton spoke eloquently and thoughtfully for a half hour. His address dealt with "The Beautiful," and his opening was devoted to a word picture of Charlevoix.

The large attendance evidenced the fact that Charlevoix is proud of her school, and the marked success of the school year, so auspiciously celebrated, is, it is hoped, only the beginning of still greater successes under the masterly guidance of Superintendent Eaton.

The motto of the class of '91—"More Beyond"—is a good one for the school patrons and the school board to adopt in their government of the school. The status of the Charlevoix school, in its administrative and educational standards, should be raised.

To see the rusty chain that holds the pail

Leapt at the sight, and my mouth watered
Like a fountain when I saw the bright drops
Ascending, and I drank and was refreshed.
The water was cold, and it was good to drink
Of it when I was thirsty. But now
The water is warm, and I do not drink it
Because it is warm, and I am not thirsty.
The water is filthy, and I do not drink it
Because it is filthy, and I am not thirsty.
The water is full of animalcules, and I do not

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

CHARLEVOIX, JUNE 17, 1892.

England declares that the tariff is a tax and kicks at it.

Von Moltke's belief was firm, up to his death, that a general European war could not be deferred later than 1892.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette calls attention to the fact that the United States sells four times as much in Mexico markets as Great Britain, the great free trade country of the world.

The Detroit Free Press calls upon the Tribune to make good its charges of bribery against Senator Pribdemier, or apologize for its assault upon his character and "set him right in the estimation of the people." The latter never can be done by any paper or person. He will always be the self confessed bigamist.

The Democratic papers are greatly worried about James G. Blaine. They evidently fear his popularity. They are trying to make people believe that he and President Harrison are at outs. Again they say that Blaine has lost his mind. In regard to this latter charge the Cincinnati Enquirer, one of the ablest Democratic papers of the country, says that it would be well if some of the would be statesmen could find some of that lost mind.

The Democratic press is not quieting the fears of the tin-makers on the other side of the Atlantic by asserting that all the stories about the establishment of tin plants in the United States are untrue. The London Financial Times says in regard to the tin reports that the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes, and that few people doubt that soon or at later efforts in the direction of tin-making in the United States will be crowned with success. The British manufacturer realizes the opportunity that the Hourbon free-traders are purposely belittling.

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is denouncing Secretary Blaine for his recent spurning of United States Consuls in Central and South America in regard to the American bottled beer trade. If the temperance women prefer to see the South Americans imbibe the hot alcoholic drinks which beer almost invariably supplants to a large extent wherever it is introduced, they are pursuing the right course in fighting the exportation of our bottled beer. The average temperance advocate, so-called, is very intemperate in his view as to means to a desired end.

One of the most extraordinary products of the stagnant Brownine minds of idiot temperance legislators has been repeated by the Massachusetts legislature. It was the public bar bill, designed to promote temperance by compelling people to take their drinks while sitting at tables. The law was enforced in Boston last year for the first time and resulted in such an increase of drunkenness that the temperance people raised a hue and cry against the enforcement of the liquor men in demanding its repeal. Its history is an apt illustration of the folly of purely theoretical legislation and petty acts of regulation to prevent drinking and drunkenness.

Despite the attendant monetary loss and the shocking outflow of blood, the war of the rebellion was a good thing for the South. This is so apparent that men who were almost paupefized by the war have declared that the war was the best thing that could have happened to the old slave states. It not only compelled the whites in the South to be self-reliant, but it revealed the wonderful natural resources of the Southern States in the eyes of the energetic Northerners. If the South had been victorious the condition of things both social and commercial would not be as it is today, marvelous in the extreme. Slavery would have been continued, indolence would not have given place to energy, and the line between the North and the south would now be a barrier against the southward progress of social and commercial prosperity. Edward Atkinson, the statistician, who recently made an extended trip through the South, is filled with enthusiasm as to the variety and richness of the natural resources of that section. He says the Southern States have almost unlimited supplies of fire clays, kaolin and glass sand, iron, coal, manganese, and salt. With the calculating observation of a statistician he remarks of the plethora of natural wealth that it is "no great, to actually constitute a disability which may for a time stand in the way of the arts in which success depends upon the saving of a portion of a cent on each pound or each yard. And it which a very large capital must not only be expended but constantly maintained in order to get one man or woman at work." But the general public will not entertain any alarm upon that point. It will contemplate with pride the prospects of of the "New South" and speculate as to the extent of the wealth of our great nation when we shall have fully grasped our opportunity in the South, the Southwest, and the West.

The Woodchuck Hole.

How some one thought of boyhood's pulsing joys
And the water fight for place and pelf,
Comes in sharp contrast to the selfish strife,
Which arises throughout the earth itself
Yet in these days, my memory goes
To the Woodchuck hole, where, in days of yore,
We, as boys, all hours, save summer Sabbaths stood Ready
Ready—and sees the woodchuck hole!

It matters not what life the toiler leads
Where or when in the land world he has made,
Or what strange fortune he may have met with,
Or how strongly he may be marked by fate,
It matters not what pleasure and what pain
Has come to him, what has been fortune's lot
The dream of youth is clear, and once again
He sees the meadow and the woodchuck hole!

He sees where most the clover-blossoms
Sweet
Where the arrow trails are here and there
Scattered,
He notes how all the little bluebirds trend
In vain, to reach the border of the field
And on the hillside, where the thistles grow,
He sees the woodchuck's home, the jimson-weed
The extensive dark, the outstrown stay
A yellow passage to the woodchuck hole.

He catches summer perfumes, as of yore,
His pulses beats faster with a youthful joy,
He hears the bees hum, the birds sing merry,
He sees the sparrow and eager hop
He feels the fleet runners to enjoy
Yet vividly his home is the jaded soul
Brings sweet delights such as the clover-field
Hill for the hop who sought the woodchuck hole!

—Stanley Waterloo.

HIS VISITOR.

Richard Whiststone had done a day's work. He had made one or two profitable bargains, had read a little boy with a pinched pitiful face, who had brought the price of a loaf of bread and who said he had a sick mother at home, a lecture on the sinfulness of begging, that evidently touched the little urchin's conscience, for he turned aside and wept bitterly.

"Wonder a good sixpence, Dick," he said as he sat down to dinner, "and deserves to be generous."

The dinner was one after his own heart. It was true he had promised himself if things went right. He ate, drank and was happy.

The current of his thoughts was interrupted by a loud knock. Who could be coming on business at that hour? Some one, perhaps, with a bill to discount in an emergency that would bear no waiting. So much the better, and he hastened to open the door.

"How are you, Dick?" the stranger greeted him, with a familiarity also together too careless for a needy customer.

"I have not the pleasure of your acquaintance, sir," said Richard, in a tone more freezing than polite.

"But I know you very well," returned the stranger; "and pray don't let us stand here laughing ceremonious, for it's confoundedly chilly," saying which, he led the way to the apartment Dick had just quitted. "Well, this is comfort," he continued, rubbing his hands before the fire. "I haven't felt so much at home since I left there."

A hasty survey of his visitor added alarm to Richard's astonishment. He was a wiry, ill-looking little man, in a tawny suit of black, with a wicked leer on his face, and one club foot.

"I say, Dick," the little man resumed, holding his hands in the blaze as if they were strangers, "what an inhospitable dog you are."

"Another hospitable or inhospitable," growled Richard, losing his temper as he gained his courage, "is not your business; but I should like to know what it."

"It's bad talking business on an empty stomach."

"I don't see how it's to be helped," answered Dick, doggedly.

"Don't see how it's to be helped, you curmudgeon!" thundered the little man, fiercely. "With the remains of such a feast on the table, there must be more where it came from."

"Upon my word," replied Richard meekly, for he was getting frightened again, "there is not a bite in the house."

"Don't lie!" roared the other; "there is a cold ham in the pantry and a Cheshire cheese in the closet."

"How do you know that?" it was on the tip of Richard's tongue to ask, but he was too much an ass to speak.

"How do I know it?" broke in the stranger, as if reading his thoughts, "why, I smell them; so bring them out."

Richard would have demurred, but his guest made a movement which convinced him that delay might be dangerous, and the required articles were produced. Without changing his seat the little man drew up to the table and began to eat. A chunk of ham big enough for a short leg was crammed into the point of a carving-knife as it thrust down his throat with the audacity of a sword-swallower. Another and another followed, till nothing remained but the bone, which he crushed with his teeth and then sucked the marrow.

"Now for punch!" he cried.

"There is no hot water," Richard ventured to say.

"Water!—who asked for water? Bring me a lemon, some sugar and a bottle."

The bottle was placed on the fire. The stranger filled it with brandy, adding lemon and sugar to suit his taste. As the liquor boiled over it caught fire, setting the whole in a blaze. Richard jumped up to take it off the stranger caught his arm and flung him back as if he had been a child, instead of a substantial citizen of fourteen stone.

"Pass no free talk about" he demanded. "The punch is doing well enough."

"I was only afraid the house might be burned."

"Rather the house," replied the little man; "there's no danger."

"Your health, Dick!" at length he said, and, raising the bottle all then to his lips, he drank like a dromedary. "And now, lad, it's your turn, he said, after a long breath. "You must drink my health now."

Richard drew back.

"Drink!" shouted the stranger, holding out the vessel.

Poor Dick took a single gulp. He felt the skin of his mouth cut the brim of the bottle. His throat was scorched as with liquid fire, and his hair was ragged by the blaze.

"And now to business," said the stranger, coming to a seat and leaving Dick to either sit or stand as he chose. "You have this Walter, I believe."

"I—yes," stammered Richard, "I once knew a person of that name."

"You had to be married to Halifax's mother."

Richard acknowledged the fact.

"You made money and he didn't."

"I believe I was the more fortunate of the two."

"You and he started to return together, and he died at Sam Truscbow's Richard bowed.

"His wife and child are now destitute," the stranger persisted.

"I can't help that."

"Of course not. It was his by rights gave the good advice to to-day. I hope the young scamp will profit by it."

The scene with the little beggar Richard was sure had been witnessed by no one. How the stranger had found it out was past comprehension.

"You're quite sure John Walter died poor?" the stranger went on.

"Oh, quite," said Richard; "I paid his funeral expenses myself."

"That's a lie," retorted the little man; "they were paid by the public. It's another lie that he died poor. He had $20,000 with him, which you stole."

"I deny it!" Richard fairly screamed; "and defy you to prove it!"

"Prove it! What effrontery! Why, I saw you do it!"

"It's false. There was nobody present."

"Be careful, Dick, or you'll commit yourself. I saw you do another thing."

Richard shrank shivering in a chair, but said nothing.

"John Walter would have survived his illness, but you put poison in his medicine!"

A sudden fury took possession of Richard Whiststone when he saw the secret of his life in another's keeping. The carving-knife lay within his reach. He seized it, and springing on the stranger with a desperate plunge, sought to bury the blade in his heart, but it glanced as from plate armor and in an instant the little man was on his feet.

"Oh, ho, that's your game, is it?"

And with a rip that sent his heels spinning in the air, Richard was thrown headlong with a force that shook the house to its foundation. The club foot was planted on his stomach—and what a horrible ugly foot it was! It was cleft like the hoof of an ox and seemed to weigh a ton.

"Then you are the—"

"Pray keep a civil tongue in your head, and come along," said the little man.

Richard trained.

When he came to himself day was breaking. The old housekeeper, who had found him groaning and sprawling on the floor, had, with much difficulty, shaken him into consciousness. She assisted him to bed, but Richard never was himself again. The sorfeit of a pig had brought on a fever, of which he died in eight days. His last rational act was the execution of a will by which he left the bulk of his fortune to John Walter's wife and child; which, after all, was a simple act of justice for the doomed of night mare had told the truth.—N. Y. World.

The Soldier's Legacy.

Not only was General Sherman devoted to his friends, but he was particularly devoted to his family and his family in him. He bought the house on West Seventy-first street so that his wife, who was an invalid up to the day of her death, might be able to drive in the park without being jarred over the cobblestones, and though it was inconvenient for him personally to live so far up town, he always insisted that he preferred that to any other part of the city. This little house in Seventy-first street, when he made historic, is like most of the other houses in that neighborhood. It faces the south, and consequently gets plenty of the sun that the old General loved. His office or study was the front room of the house, and there he had his desk and that of his secretary, who had charge of his enormous correspondence. It was not so very many weeks ago that General Sherman took me down into this room, and into a little vault opening off from it, where he kept his important papers and journals. The vault is almost a room, as rooms in New York houses go, being about 7 feet long and 5 feet wide. The walls are lined with shelves filled with journals, letters, maps and every scrap of paper connected with the part that General Sherman played in the late civil war. All these records are kept in the most exact and systematic manner, being carefully indexed, so that he could turn to any letter or any paper or any entry in his diaries at a moment's notice. He took down some of the volumes and brought them over to the front while he turned the pages and explained to me the system upon which the books were kept. He even had memoranda prepared in this way, it would be difficult to over-estimate the historical value of this collection. When I asked General Sherman what he intended to do with it, he said it was his legacy to his children; that not a line should be published during his lifetime; and then he spoke about his death, and said that he had everything arranged, so that he was ready to die at any time, so far as his affairs were concerned. I told him that he was good for another twenty years, and he must not talk about dying, at which he smiled grimly and said what difference did it make, we had all got to die, and the sooner we might as well be ready for death when it comes.—N. Y. Letter.

Of Course, Papa Earned the Money.

"If there is one great nuisance in this hotel above all others," says a clerk of the Palace hotel, San Francisco, "it is that of the young English tourist who is making a trip around the world. There is scarcely a day in the year that some of these London snobs does not drop in upon us. They spend money liberally it is true, but they invariably drink like fish, and they soon become very unpleasant guests. One of our recent subjects was a young man named MacArthur, who left a few days ago for Australia. When he arrived here in the overland train from the east he planked down $1,000 at the cashier's desk to be called for. He remained with us just five days, and when the steamer sailed and MacArthur called for the balance of the funds he received just $1,000. In five days' dissipation the young man spent $2,000 in San Francisco. Pretty rapid gait for a young tourist. He was not a swell either, but an ordinary, every-day young Englishman."

Bird's-Eye Pine.

The fine grain of the Louisiana pine is now being utilized for making mantels. The grain is said to be brought out in polishing to a degree that makes it a very effective rival of bird's-eye maple. The new article is known as "bird's-eye pine," and there is a large demand for it in the west, where it is manufactured into mantels and other furniture. Cypress and other woods of that State will, it is believed, be brought into use for the same purpose. Not be deceived by any of the so-called "Russian boots" now being offered as "genuine" and "genuine." To be one of these has Stanley endured a fine.

FARMERS, READ THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any farm tool this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S.

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implement, have become acquainted with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we assure you at whatever effort, we have secured the best and latest improved machine with which to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and exclusive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better articles for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these propositions, and if you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place.

THE ORANGEMEN.

The U. S. Grand Lodge Session at Detroit Last Week.

Two years ago the National Grand Lodge of Orangemen held its annual session in Charlevoix and our people became acquainted with many of the leading lights of the order.

Last week the same body met in Detroit, and the familiar names appear in the proceedings. About two hundred delegates were present.

The following resolutions were passed shortly before adjournment, and will show what the principles of the order are:

Resolved, That the Loyal Orange Institution of America will cheerfully and cordially co-operate with all patriotic organizations in the effort to foster and build up a more distinctly American sentiment among the people of our common country. National unity being essential to national strength, we hereby suggest the following as elements that should enter into such national union:

Maintain of the common school system of the country.

Compulsory education in the English language of all children of school age.

Prohibition of the teaching of the creed, forms, or ceremonies of any sect, religious organizations or society in the public schools.

No public funds or public property to be devoted to the furtherance of either popish, mormon or other religio-political designs, hostile to American liberty, whether through educational, reformatory, penal or charitable institutions, under any pretense whatever.

The equal taxation of all property.

State visitation and inspection of all religious houses, so called.

The exclusion of Roman catholics from the public schools, to which they are hostile, whether as officers or teachers.

Restriction of the vast flood of immigration now being poured upon the country.

Extension of the period required for the naturalization, as to their fitness for citizenship.

None but full citizens of the United States to be allowed to vote at election.

Reservation of the public lands for American citizens, and that neither foreign nor domestic syndicates be permitted to own them.

Resolved, That we sympathize with the rising sentiment among the middle and industrial classes for essential reforms in economic citizens, among which are the following, which we believe should be brought about as soon as practicable:

Reforms in our electoral system, by which the great secrecy of the ballot may be secured.

A government currency for the people.

Government control of the means of transportation.

A government postal telegraph.

Our Industrial Prospects.

Evidences are at hand that the superior advantages of Charlevoix for manufacturing enterprises are coming into notice.

Yesterday a gentleman arrived from Ohio to look over our town and timber with a view of establishing an extensive establishment, the particulars of which we hope to be able to give soon.

The officers of the Improvement Association are in correspondence with others, and good results are expected.

We repeat what has been often said in these columns: We have the timber; we have the location; and we have—or will soon have—the transportation facilities.

With the completion of the railroad, Charlevoix offers advantages that surpass those of any other point in this region.

Hon. E. W. Mayne, secretary of the Charlevoix Improvement Association, will answer correspondence giving all desired information.

Northern Michigan News.

Petoskey's new opera house will be opened June 16.

William Alden Smith, of Grand Rapids, will orate at Petoskey July 4.

D. L. Case died at his home in Acme June 6th, aged 56 years. Mr. Case came there with his parents in 1853, and that has been his home since that time.

A gang of eighteen Italians, who were at work on the new railroad west of Petoskey became dissatisfied with their wages and quit. They went back to Chicago.

Petoskey Democrat: One day last week Frank Davis, of Bear Lake, discovered a deer swimming across the harbor. Getting into the boat, he started in pursuit and soon had a rope around its neck, but it struggled so hard that he had to let it go to prevent his boat from being capsized. The deer swam ashore, and in its fright got entangled in the brush. Mr. Davis released it and sent it on its way rejoicing.

East Jordan Enterprise: We are glad to note the spirit of fairness and interest that is apparently taking hold of our people in regard to securing a railroad. It does not matter to us what road we get, be it a stub from the West Michigan; from the G. H. & L. the Ward road or the Toledo & Ann Arbor. We want a road and should be ready to give to the first that comes their choice of terminal facilities. Do not argue that we had better save some for other roads. The one that comes first deserves the best and let the later ones take what is left.

Petoskey Record: The committee who are procuring the right of way purchased of H. O. Rose on Friday last, the ground upon which will be located the passenger depot. The ground extends from the bay on the north to Bay street on the south, and from the road leading to Seymour's dock west to the village grounds upon which the pump house is located. The fact that the officials of the new road are so desirous of procuring spacious grounds would indicate that they do not propose to erect a 2x4 building for the accomodation of their patrons.

Petoskey Record: Burnett, of Harbor Springs, the young Indian, in whom all the people of Emmet Co. take an interest, has not only won high honors as a scholar at school in the Michigan Agricultural college, but a great reputation as an all-round athlete. In the inter-collegiate field day at Olivet last Friday he made a wonderful record. In the forenoon he took first, throwing a 16-pound hammer 101 feet 10 inches; first, putting 15-pound shot 33 feet, after which he pitched in the ball game against Albion winning 11 to 8. In the afternoon he took first in standing hop, step and jump, 29 feet, 1 in; first, running hop, skip and jump, 41 feet, 1½ inches; first, high kick, 6 feet, 9½ inches; first, standing three jumps, 31 feet 4½ inches. Then he pitched the game against Olivet, winning by a score of 10 to 9. That's a big days work for himself and college.

T. H. Noble is building a costly residence in Elk Rapids.

Workmen are now engaged in driving spiles for the approaches for the new railroad bridge across the head of Boardman river at Traverse City extension of the C. & W. M.

J. H. McLean, chief contractor of the Chicago & West Michigan, says that if unimpeded by strikes, the steel between Traverse City and Petoskey will be all spiked down by Nov. 1st.

The most popular book at all northern resorts this season will be "Along Traverse Shores." It is joint production of Mrs. M. E. C. Bates, associate editor of the Traverse City Herald, and Mrs. M. K. Buck, of Traverse City, who is a graceful and pleasing writer.

Petoskey Record: On Wednesday three woodsmen walked into the Clifton House and the leader registered as "Jack-Walk-Up-The-Creek." At dinner the party was noisy and offensive, and in their horse-play broke a large dish. When they came to settle their bill Mr. Rowan charged "Jack-Walk-Up-The-Creek" 50 cents for the broken dish, whereupon Mr. J. W. U. T. C. intimated (in language which would have been easily out of place in the Epworth League) that "if he got that 50 cents he would have to take it out of his side." Upon this old Joe walked around the counter and in less than 15 seconds the bully was knocked out of time. We guess the next time Mr. J. W. U. T. C. strikes this town he will not try any "monkey" business round the Clifton.

Another Plant.

Jerome Heath returned from Chicago last week to superintend the erection and management of a planing mill about to be established by Nicholls, Lewis & Bates.

Plans and specifications are now being prepared, and work will be commenced as soon as they are perfected. The building will stand just north of the lumber shed, fronting on North Bridge Street, and will be 45x60, and two stores high. The power will be the 65 horse power engine that was in use in the old Charlevoix Manufacturing Co's factory. The boiler will be placed in the mill boiler house, and steam conveyed to the factory from there, and to which the shavings and refuse will be conveyed by blowers.

A flooring machine has already been purchased, and about a dozen other pieces of machinery will be added. It is the purpose of the concern to manufacture all kinds of building material.

The well known public spirit and business ability of the firm is a guaranty that the establishment will be a benefit to Charlevoix and the region tributary to it.

The four-masted ship Shenandoah, the finest and largest sailing vessel that ever flew the stars and stripes, reached San Francisco on May 20, after a voyage of 120 days from New York. Her fastest run was thirteen knots an hour for twenty-four hours. There is only one larger sailing ship afloat, the French five masted steel ship France, now on her way from Valparaiso to San Francisco. Faster time than the Shenandoah's has been made often between New York and San Francisco, but by much smaller ships. Her length is 299.7 feet, her breadth 49.1 feet and her depth 28.8 feet and she spreads 11,000 yards of canvas. Her net tonnage is 3,258.47 tons. She will return to New York with a load of barley.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Durlington, O., states that he had suffered the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better, he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any throat, lung or chest trouble try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at F. G. Hines & Co's.

—W. H. Vaughan, late with the Hiffenburg Milling Co., on Monday entered the employ of Amos Fox, as manager and book-keeper in his grocery establishment.

—Miss Pearle Dartt, left for Frankfort, where she will visit friends and take a teacher's examination, after which she expects to teach a three month term of school.

—The Charlevoix base ball boys have fine new uniforms, and are using them for the first time to-day in mopping the green and fragrant meadow with the Petoskey lads.

—S. B. Calkins has received his full letters patent on his legal blank display rack—one of the most useful articles ever invented. It is bound to make a millionaire of Calkins.

—Prof. Nadeau's solo and quartette "Flock of Ages," has been accepted by Ixcell, the Chicago music publisher, and will be among the numbers in a forthcoming book of anthems.

—Will Lewis is behind the counters at Mason & Berdan's.

—Geo. Sherwood and wife returned home from Chicago Sunday.

—J. T. Kirkpatrick returned to Big Traverse Bay yesterday.

—"Upman's Invincible" cigar, at Calkins & Warne's is a dandy.

—C. H. Bellinger has "Charlevoix Souvenir Spoons." Read his new ad.

—Miss Kirwin left Monday morning for her home in Brattleboro, Vt.

—Moore & Nettleton, real estate dealers, have a change of ad. this week.

—Hon. A. Buttars has been quite sick the past week, but is back in the bank.

—Street Commissioner Kirby is grading up and improving Bridge street.

—Albert E. Mason, the wide awake grocer, has something to say to his patrons.

—Samuel M. See returned home from Wisconsin on the Lawrence Sunday.

—Miss Swails has been employed at saleslady in the Charlevoix candy factory.

—A. B. Gates fell and sustained a severe sprain yesterday, and is flat on his back.

—N. H. Hatchford and family are in their cottage at the Chicago Resort grounds.

—Miss Tinsy, of Ypsilanti, has been engaged to succeed Miss Bailey in the High school.

—Bear in mind the Improvement Association meeting Friday evening at the Village Hall.

—Mason & Berdan have a new advertisement in this issue, which interests their patrons.

—Judge Glover and Dr. Valle, and their wives have engaged rooms at the Fountain City House.

—Mr. Eaton, of Ellsworth, has bought a thresher and traction engine of Thacker & Gordon.

—Mrs. J. Coffman and Miss Nattie Patter, of St. Louis, Mo., are at O. S. Washburn's for the summer.

—The committee have perfected arrangements for a good, lively celebration in Charlevoix this year.

—Excavations for the N.L.& B.R.R. factory were made last week, and the foundation will soon be ready.

—Frank Wood's bath rooms have been repainted and refitted, making them the finest in Northern Michigan.

—The legal notice in another column gives a description of the railroad bridge to be erected here this season.

—The bills are out for a big time here the 4th. A good program is arranged. Everybody come to Charlevoix to celebrate.

—Railroad Commissioner Chas. H. Whitman, of Ann Arbor, will arrive tomorrow, and will be the guest of C. Y. Cook for a time.

—The Harbor Springs band plays at East Jordan the 4th, and Col. Paulsen delivers an oration at Boyne City on the same day.

—W. G. Wormley, route agent of the American Express Co., was in town yesterday, and sampled our coffee, with Bert Fox as Agent.

—The fog was at half-mast on the schooner Florence M. Smith yesterday. Capt. Lorenz was advised by telegraph of the death of a child.

—The Emmet county bar tendered Judge Dilthoyy a complimentary banquet at the Occidental hotel, in Petoskey, on the evening of June 12.

—The Board of Supervisors yesterday adjourned to July 15th, at two o'clock p. m. A. J. Sizeed was appointed to attend the State Board of Equalization.

—The East Jordan Enterprise says the latest railroad rumor is for a line to cross from the Michigan Central along the south shore of Pine Lake crossing the Arm at Ironton and running to Charlevoix.

—Miss Jessie Morgan, of Oberlin, O., national organizer of "Y" Unions, will give an address in the Congregational church this (Wednesday) evening. Her subject will be. "The Relation of Young People to the Temperance Work." The meeting is free, but a collection will be taken up. Do not fail to hear Miss Morgan, as she is a lady of rational fame.

—Work on the railroad is progressing satisfactorily. More men were added to the force here last week. Eight miles have been graded from Traverse City north, and the contractors intend to begin laying iron July 17th. There is no news concerning the Clak contract, for six miles south of Charlevoix, but it is expected that it will be commenced in a few days. A misunderstanding exists between the railroad company and John C. Miller, regarding right-of-way across the latter's farm in this township. Mr. Miller refuses to accept the company's offer of $500, and condemnation will be resorted to, and the matter left to a jury. The same condition of affairs exists between the company and O. D. Wood, just south of the Miller place.

—Mr. Webb, the gentleman who claims $500 from the corporation of Charlevoix for alleged injuries to his sacred person by reason of an alleged defective sidewalk, contributed $6.50 in the coin of the realm to the public coffers Monday afternoon. Chas. Smith, a quiet young man, had been working for the claimant, hauling bark, but threw up the job, at which the aforesaid claimant became incensed, and while discussing the matter on Carpenter's dock Monday, Webb smote Smith, hip and thigh, adding a few smites to brow and cheek bone, cutting him up badly. Justice C. Y. Cook frowned on Webb and invited him to come down with $5.90 and costs. Webb may now add that amount to his claim against the taxpayers.

—Will N. Moore, of the law and real estate firm of Moore & Nettleton returned last Friday from a two weeks business trip to Grand Rapids and Detroit. He reports the wheat crop as looking fine. Hay will be light, and cut-worms are devastating corn fields in many places, some large fields having been cultivated up by the discouraged owners, who will plant beans thereon. At Detroit there is great activity among the real estate men, who are making a specialty in booming suburban residence property. In this way a number of small towns contiguous to the city have received a considerable impetus already this season, and even the banks of many of the small and picturesque lakes of Oakland county are being embellished with new summer residences by Detroit parties. He says also that no place he saw can compare with Charlevoix as a desirable residence town.

—S. B. Thatcher and wife, of Napoleon, Ohio, where the genial Sam is proprietor of the Union House, are coming north for a few weeks outing during the heated season. Sam formerly resided in this county, as every man, woman and child knows, and a large majority of them are sorry that he did not remain. Sam was a record breaker in politics. He came to this county some years ago as a lumbersteader, when the tiller of the soil had something to do to keep the wolf from the door. Voters were scarce, but Sam always gathered them in at the proper time. He was Supervisor of his town until he became tired of it, and was elected twice by large majorities to the office of County Clerk. Next, Sam was twice elected President of Boyne City, and was postmaster of that town when he resigned to move south to Ohio. No knowing to what dignity he would have attained had he remained here longer. Up north Sam is greatly changed, we would advise the good people of Ohio not to leave their public offices lying around loose, or S. B. will have them safely corralled in one of the rooms of the Union House. Another peculiarity about Sam is that while he is getting there himself, he looks out for the other boys on the ticket. Sam is a natural and magnetic leader. He has not been forgotten, and will receive a cordial welcome here.

That Book Edition.

Will somebody tell us where the loose comes in here. The Daily Press says:

"To be candid, the writer would not advise any man to come to Charlevoix to enter business, unless he came with capital and patience sufficient to last him until the growth of the town brought him the desired result."

That statement is very misleading, and does not convey the truth. Focus of Charlevoix emanating from Petoskey smell rather rank.

CHUB.

A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XXI.

CHUB'S LITTLE MISS.

"It is plain the Shindig has been adopting, by the paper they found on Dave's person. This time he has committed an offence or compounded himself in some other way.

"That's lonely," said the sheriff.

"Now to say he was trading with counterfeiters would seem—"

"Impossible! Mr. That was what they did do."

"But it can be proved by a dozen witnesses that this same gang tried to kill Him at the Corners when he came here fire, so shortly after he unknown been—"

"Now referring to the facts, I suppose," said the sheriff.

Chub blushed.

"It happened there just it time to one—the time I mentioned—and Dave was—"

"Shot," said Chub.

"Shot," he agrees, shortly. "I wouldn't be so sure about it. I was there in a remote background at the time, being—as I said—a little scared. Dave was shot, sure enough, but not by the Shindig."

"I heard tell Dr. Cloyd, Dawson's partner, was there and saw the bullet out."

"Yes, I reckon I was, and I saw what he saw. Dave was shot by a heavy rifle, and the bullet came from behind."

"Why, I thought it was a small pistol."

"I believe it will be, Mr. Chub."

"Now, how is my pipe," said Chub.

"Why, I reckon it is mighty good. Dave, he was—I mean—he was shot in a small pistol, or a cannon ball, or a rifle, or a musket, or a—"

"I know what you mean," said Chub, in impatient affability whispering to the sheriff, who was about to say that he knew that he confessed he had shot Dave himself, and was glad it was so. "Pipe, Dave?"

"Thank you, Chub," said the sheriff.

"Three months," said Chub.

"Three months," said Dave Mack, drawing the pipe, apparently, to pass the time away, and to show that he did think Chub's transactions were with a gentleman of leisure, "three months, let off the country, a pleasant—"

"You have a wonderful head, Mac."

"Thank you, Chub. I'm proud to hear you say so. I'm proud to have—"

"Proud of the good opinion of the sheriff," said Chub.

"Well, I am, Chub, I am. I'm proud to have—"

"Proud of the good opinion of the sheriff," said Chub, approvingly, to gain time, for he was trading with the counterfeiters were with a gang of thieves, which he was trying to unprovoked on them, fight to unprovoked on them, fight to unprovoked on them, fight

The Nominees.

The shameful record of the Democratic Michigan Legislature is about complete. This state was never before disgraced by any public body assembled within her boundaries, as she has been and is to-day by her squawtwack legislature at Lansing. Indeed it is doubtful if there was ever a more shameful exhibition of venality, dishonesty and imbecility displayed by any legislative body of any state in the union. The most unpaid and outrageous partisan legislation has been enacted with the hope that it might result in success for the Democracy in the next presidential contest. Congressional districts have been gerrymandered for the sole purpose of attempting to secure a Democratic delegation from a Republican state, and the same course has been pursued in the apportionment of senatorial and Representative districts.

Bribery and whiskeyism have been chief characteristics of the session, and falsification of the records have been its chief pastime.

The New Apportionment.

The apportionment bill, as it has finally passed makes the 11th Congressional district as follows: Counties of Manistee, Grand Traverse, Antrim and Charlevoix.

The 27th Senatorial district is as follows: Counties of Mecosta, Oceola, Wexford, Benzie, Leelanaw, Grand Traverse, Antrim, Charlevoix, Manitou county goes into the 10th Congressional district with Emmet, and into the 28th Senatorial with the same county as political guardian.

The Ohio state Convention last week Nominated Major McKinley for Governor.

On and after July 4 of this year "Old Glory" will bear forty-four stars presenting the final of all states in the astronomy of nations.

The counting of the cash in the Treasury so far has shown a possible discrepancy of just one dollar which the "Young Treasurer is entirely able to pay.

The infamous that bears the hard set on the people's party is the fact that the crop prospects are unusually good in this country and unusually bad in Europe.

It is safe to say that Mr. Hallon's health will be restored in time to negotiate several more reciprocity treaties for the benefit of his party in the fall elections.

Maj. McKinley will be elected Governor of Ohio under any circumstances but his majority will depend upon the action of the Democrats. That is to say, it will be considerably larger in case of the re-nomination of Campbell.

The Republicans of New York are entirely harmonious this year; and when they are harmonious they are always invincible, particularly when, as at present, the Democrats are ghost-dancing in angry and vindictive fashion.

Wheat is now being carried from Chicago to Buffalo at the supposed entirely low rates of 1 cent a bushel or less than it costs the farmer to haul the grain from his farm to the railroad station. There is surely no extortion in a charge of that kind.

It ought not to be necessary to tell the Democrats that the Republicans desire to see Mr. Cleveland nominated next year is genuine and profound of the three or four men who have been prominently mentioned for the favors of the Democratic National Convention of 1892 Republicans believe Cleveland to be the weakest. Republican judgment on this point may be in error, but that this is the judgment of two out of every three of the intelligent members of the Republican party are title Democrats ought to realize by this time.

A curious case at law, between the Free Masons and Knights of Maccabeausee, has just been decided. The head of the Jesuit mission in Madagascar had been fined $200 and ordered to pay damages to the amount of $2,000 to the Free Masons in that country. Last year a lodge of Free Masons were established in Antananarivo, the Capital of Madagascar. The Jesuits at once issued a pamphlet, in the Malagasy language, setting forth the "disreputable and loathsome proofs of Free Masonry." The pamphlet said that the evils of Free Masonry were too great to be described in detail and therefore attention was confined to some principal instances. It asserted that kings and princes had been so beguiled by the social pleasures and feastings of Free Masonry as to shelter beneath their rank and power the agents of the craft who had the descretion of these royal personages in charge, and who carried our orgy secretion. The excursion of Louis XVI at the time of the French revolution was ascribed to Free Masonry. The pamphlet also said that previous to the introduction of Free Masonry in to England from Germany, in 1717 the people of that country were noted for the rectitude of their conduct but that Free Masonry had spread among them vices of all sorts and many unspeakable crimes and evils, until the people had become grossly corrupted. The English now neither spread nor believed in the Creator who made them and this state of things was due wholly to the presence of Free Masonry.

The pamphlet made a profound impression and gave Free Masonry a bad name among the native, but the more intelligent part of the people think the Fathers have sustained a well deserved defeat in losing their cows.

Northern Michigan News.

James McCann has bought out the dials and mercantile business of Chambers Bros. & Co., at St. James.

Six young lady graduates of the Petoskey Normal Academy will be turned loose upon the unsuspecting North Michiganders this week.

East Jordan Enterprise: John Maurer, of South Arm is having his pile driver put in repair. He has, in addition to his big 50 at Elmira several small jobs to do at East Jordan, Boyne City, Eastport, etc.

The hotel Nestawanda, on the State University resort grounds at Traverse bay is being completed and will be opened early next month. The manager will be D. D. Mitchell, proprietor of the Albion house at Albion.

Bellaire Bugle: Our village officers are of the temperance variety, and the same can be said of our township board. Parties desiring to establish saloons should save the expense and trouble of coming here, for there is no opening for them, save possibly the one that leads to the interior of jail.

Robert Richards's big woodenware works and the village water works at Bellaire were destroyed by fire during the night of the 20th. A large number of men are thrown out of work and it is a severe blow to the village. Loss $10,000, with no insurance. It is not known whether Richards will rebuild or not.

Marcelona Herald: Geo. Nichols, better known as "Happy George," is the attraction at present. His place of business is a dry goods box and his stock of merchandise consists of a bunch of onions, while the "attractions" is nothing more nor less than a jew harp and a mouth which he can wind up and set in motion, and which some people seem to be drawn and hang to his gaseous pet and it will keep right on warning while the owner is swapping up goods and making change.

Cadillac Express: The statement has been published that fully one million dollars in farm mortgages have been discharged in Northern Michigan as the result of last season's potato crop. That succeeding year may prove as profitable to our potato growers is the universal wish of those who understand the phenomenal development of this portion of the great peninsular state. As a rule the farmers who harvested a supply of potatoes in excess of their own requirements, exercised good business sagacity in selling when the demand stimulated the most advantageous price. The eagerness of some holders to get a few cents per bushel more than the market price, even when an early decline was inevitable as the natural result of the revolving seasons, has been the cause of disappointment and the loss of considerable sums of money to those who refused to sell at the highest prices offered here by shippers. A few weeks ago potatoes were in demand by the train load, at ninety one dollar per bushel, but an offer of a few hundred now at fifty cents per bushel, finds no buyers beyond the requirements of the local consumers, who are willing only to pay about half what could have been realized before the collapse of the demand for potatoes from this south.

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may consider yourself the one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of the staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, Dr. King's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it, and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any throat, lung or chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time or money refunded. Trial bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co's drug store. 6

President Garfield at School.

James A. Garfield was a school when seventeen years of age. He sons shown that he was a great scrapper, and great powers of observation, learning a great deal from overhearing the recitations of the older scholars in his class. The master of the school he attended boarded at his mother's house, and took a great fancy to young Garfield, quickly discovering that he was a bright boy. He told the little fellow that he would make his mark some day be a General. James soon after went to his mother, and asked her to tell him what a General was. He quickly told him an interesting story of how his ancestors had fought in the Revolutionary war, explaining that though several of them died in the service, they were never rendered that dignity. James understood it was to be a General, though he expressed grave doubts about his ever being one.

This same teacher laid down in the school a new law to the effect that scholars should not look about the schoolroom, as it interfered with studying their lessons. Now little James Garfield was of a very active turn of mind, he had always been used to looking around the room, and, as I said, was a pretty "spirited up" considerable information by listening to the recitations of the older pupils around their lessons. He tried to obey the rule for by nature he was a most obedient child, but every now and then his eyes would be turned from his book, and go wandering off to the group of scholars reciting in another part of the room. One evening in the presence of his mother the teacher complained to his mother of the waste of attention. The principal punishment perhaps in could not sit still; that he had been an industrious active child all his life. James cried, and said he thought it was a mean rule, and that he would try again. To sit still, he said, was the same as to be saying lie, "pick up his mats" when the other scholars were reciting, and his eyes would roam away from the printed page before him. The teacher, however, was adamant, the opinions of the restless scholar, he noticed that he generally did his lessons better than any other boy in the class, so he came to the conclusion that James Garfield really could not master his restlessness, which was not the result of an idle nature, but of an active, inquiring mind, and he concluded to experiment him for his habit.

James Garfield was a quick-witted lad. One day he and another boy had been misbehave in a school, and the teacher told them to go home.

"How? delay?" said the teacher, "go at once."

Young Garfield darted out of the door, and ran home as fast as he could, counting the house in sight. Entering his office, then he turned round, and without stopping to his wife out of bed in the morning. He fills the stove with shavings, lights them and then shuts the damper in the pipe. By the time he reckons the burn she is effectually smoked out.

THE DUKE AND THE FARMER.

How an Old Tenant Farmer Interviewed His Noble Landlord.

They say that the late duke of Bedford's Tavistock agent, now deceased, was reputed to carry matters with a somewhat high and even a tyrannical hand, and, having a desire to benefit a neighboring tenant, had given an old farmer notice to quit possession of a field which for several generations had been part and parcel of the farm which he and his fathers before him had rented from the duke. This interference was greatly resented by the farmer, who, however, could get no satisfaction from the agent, and finally left the latter with the threat that he would "see the duke," a threat which the agent heard with little concern, knowing well that the old man had never strayed more than a few miles from Tavistock, and judging accordingly that he was not likely to journey suddenly to "London."

He reckoned, however, without knowledge for the old farmer, went straight home, dressed his "Sunday best," and, to the amazement of his folk, marched off to the railway station and took his ticket for Paddington.

The scene changes to the mansion in Eaton square, where about 7 p. m. an old countryman, dressed in the style of fifty years ago, knocks at the door and in excited and well-nigh breathless accents asks the footman who opens it if "Mr. Duke of Bedford" lived there. The footman guessed something of the state of the case and forthwith his master's name the name of his Tavistock tenants wished to see him and immediately the old man was ushered into the presence of "Mr. Duke." It is said that the old farmer's courage give way, but, seated in the luxurious library, words eloquent failed him.

The duke ordered up refreshments, but they were refused by the old man until he had told his story, which he did in broken accents, and the duke listened attentively, asking one or two simple but direct questions, and then in his old tenant to be used any trouble any more, as he should give orders that his tenancy was not to be disturbed. The duke's kindness did not end there, for ascertaining that the old man had no action as to his lodging, or indeed of his next step, the duke ordered his carriage, had the old man driven to Paddington and safely deposited in the night mail with a first-class ticket to Tavistock in his pocket.

Great Guns.

The forging of the immense guns is a most interesting process. The rifled tubes of great guns are made by centering the tube with rings and repeated layers of steel called jackets, which are fitted one over the other over the original tube or barrel of the gun. The jackets or hoops must fit as closely as the grain of forgings as the tegral part of its composition. The only way to get them on is of course, by heating, and thus enlarging them. Jackets are put on and forged on the red hot tube. The jacket is then cooled by heating and thus enlarging them

At Grand Rapids, Mich., the usual war of words broke out again with increased force and vigor. Then some sensible people suggested that a truce be called. A spirited battle ensued. Dan McCoy's Wheel Club, which has the team in the city, had arranged for a big time, and had invited many prominent Democrats to be present. The Wheelmen had arranged for a parade, and had secured a large number of torches and other paraphernalia for the occasion. The Ionia Band had been engaged to discourse music, and the Wheelmen

What We Want.

First we don't want the earth.
We do want a small portion of it.
We want to see more dinner pails in use in Charlevoix.
We want to see them prepared for the noon hour in prosperous and happy homes.
We want to see them in use then in use twelve months in the year.
We want to hear more factory whistles and see more dusty garments and grimy faces.
We want to see more tool-boxes carried along our thoroughfares.
We want to see more smoke stacks, and smell more smoke.
We want to see the cargoes that pass out from our inland waters increase in number and increase in value.
We want to see more of the profit of the big realized by the man who owns the tree.
We want to see a revival of the spirit of enterprise among our business men.
We want to see Charlevoix what nature designed her to be, the manufacturing and business center of Northern Michigan.
We want, in short, to see industrial and business activity.
There is no reason why we should not realize these things, if every citizen will make it a personal matter, and labor together for the common cause of the good of CHARLEVOIX.

Two Real Estate Deals

On Monday, L. N. Faulkner bought of Egbert Carpenter the lot on Main street adjoining the E. M. Clark residence, for $1,000. Mr. Faulkner will then improve grade and improve the property, and next summer he will erect a residence.

On the same day Mr. Carpenter purchased the Dr. Brown residence, on the corner of State and Clinton streets, for $1,050. As soon as Dr. Brown vacates, which will be in a few weeks, Mr. Carpenter will occupy it.

That Will Be Decided Later.

The New School Law.

The Legislature has enacted a new law for the government of the public schools.

The bill provides that the board of supervisors shall, on the 4th Monday in June, elect a county Commissioner of schools and two County school Examiners—one for one year and one for two years.

The board of supervisors met this week Monday. Although the law provides for this session to adjust equalization of taxes, this item of business was dwarfed by the new duties imposed by the legislature.

Monday afternoon the Board elected Mrs. Martin Beach, of Boyne City, to the office of Commissioner of Schools, and F. H. Hanney and Wm. Harris Examiners.

Mrs. Beach is a graduate of the State Normal School, and is a lady of ability and experience.

The salary of School Commissioner was fixed at $600 per annum.

—I. F. Smith is erecting a neat residence on the north side.

—The full program for the 4th at Charlevoix appears on our 5th page.

—H. Lee Iddings has something to say to the public in his space this week.

—Frank Hines has a new advertisement of special to the farmers. See it.

—One hundred presents given away at Lewis Grand Opera House to-night.

—Prof. Lowanda's Monster Gift festival at Lewis Grand Opera House to-night.

—Rev. Chas. R. Whitman speaks at Charlevoix on the 4th. Come and hear him.

—They had quite a "monkey and parrot" time over at Bellaire over the depot question.

—Mrs. J. J. Howe, of St. Ignace, daughter of M. S. Gagnon, is at the New Charlevoix.

—The Independent Order of Mosslacks" will appear in full force at Charlevoix on the 4th.

—The Chicago laundry now runs a delivery wagon, with a really and truly horse attached to it.

—Mrs. A. E. Granger, of Middleville, Mich., is spending a few weeks with her brother, W. H. McCartney.

—A great entertainment at Lewis Grand Opera House to-night. Prof. Lowanda and an evening of laughter.

—Mrs. Dr. J. A. Carlstein and her daughter Ollie will arrive to-morrow from Chicago to remain several weeks.

—Miss Lena Washburn, who has been absent in the West something more than a year, returned home last week.

—Hobart Meech and Mrs. Van Sicklen, of Burlington, Vt., brother and sister of F. J. and E. E. Meech, are here.

—Wm. Francis, the enterprising south side manufacturer, sold 34,000 gill-net corks last week. He has sold 144,000 thus far this spring.

—Mrs. Geo. M. Wood, of Eveline, was stricken with apoplexy, Saturday and cannot live. Mrs. Wood is the mother of Frank E., H. D., and J. E. Wood.

—Bob Ingersoll truly said: "There is no place so beautiful as the place where you reside." It is a sentiment that should inspire every citizen of Charlevoix.

—George Downer, son of W. H. Downer, arrived from Lake Geneva, Wis., last week, and will remain for the summer, helping his father at Cheboygan and here.

—Joe Lee is down last week. The Charlevoix boys defeated the Petoskeys last Wednesday afternoon, 15 to 3. They will play the same club again Friday afternoon.

—The fish law as just perfected absolutely prohibits the catching of fish in the inland lakes in any manner except with a hook and line. So look sharp. Charlevoix county is under an especially watchful eye.

—An Indian River friend of M. J. Stockman last week picked up a box of pineapples, fresh from the trees, or vines, or whatever they grow on, and Morris left one of them on our table. Talk about pineapples—our mouths water as we write.

—The Charlevoix Democrat in speaking of the sale of the Dixon property, says: "The deal, when completed, will not be a C. & W. M. investment, but a side issue of some of of the West Michigan officials. The 'company' will not own it, the officials will, as a private investment." That is just what the SENTINEL said three weeks ago.

—Our friend, John C. Miller, good naturedly remarks that our item last week regarding the railroad right-of-way across his place did him an injustice. The item was intended to give only the plain facts, and not to pass upon the right or wrong of the matter—that is for others to decide.

—Mr. John Kilborn, superviser of Bear Lake, was in town Thursday, and was shown about the place. His opinion: "Charlevoix is the most promising place in Northern Michigan, and I have always held that opinion. There is nothing in the way of Charlevoix making a smart business town."

—Another good thing on Webb—he of the broken shoulder blade and the $500 claim. He had a gang of men peeling bark for A. Fox. Yesterday Mr. Fox paid him $40 which was to include wages for help Webb has skinned out and the help levied on the bark this morning. Nice fellow that Webb.

—Rev. J. S. Hood has resigned the pastorate of the Congregational church of this place, to take effect in September. At that time Mr. Hood will enter the Chicago Theological Seminary for a two years course. The SENTINEL expresses the hope that he will, at the close of his studies again occupy this pulpit.

—Mr. Anthony Clark, of Marion, is of the opinion that the talk about the short hay crop is greatly overdrawn. He says the crop in that part of the county will be fully up to last year, although it has been seriously affected by the dry weather. Other crops he says, promise well and if rains come soon will be quite satisfactory.

—Kalkaska Telegraph: The force of the Charlevoix resort is spending. H. H. Everard received a letter from F. P. Elliott, vaper manufacturer of Chicago, asking for information concerning the place, as he wishes to send his daughter who is severely afflicted with hay fever. It is safe to say that Herb's answer satisfied the gentleman that Charlevoix is just the place for hay fever patients.

—The following is the school report of District No. 5, Township of Marion, for month ending June 26: whole number pupils enrolled, 12; average daily attendance, 10; average standing of pupils, viz: Nettie O'Neil, 98; Agnes O'Neill, 96; Gracie Stevens, 97; Maybelle Stevens, 93½; Ina O'Neil, 91½; Hughie O'Neil, 92; Maggie O'Neill, 95; Mattie Miller, 90; Ellie Miller, 81; Johnnie Walker, 90; Homer Pell—Gracie and Maybelle Stevens, Cora Mills, teacher.

—Prof. Lowanda will appear at Lewis Grand Opera House to-night in an entertainment embracing a variety of features, and combining to furnish much amusement and profit. Mind reading, oriental conjurers, the "Mysterious Cabinet," and wonderful feats of magic. In addition to this will be presented a grand moving panorama of scenery. One hundred presents will be given away, embracing a great variety of articles. Prof. Lowanda is great in his line.

—The Improvement Association meeting Friday evening was quite well attended, and considerable interest shown. The work of the officers and the executive committee was approved, a good report of results being made by the latter. The Secretary was instructed to draft articles of incorporation and submit to the Association at the next meeting. Good work has been done, but more remains to be done, and every household and business man owes a loyal support to those to whom the work is entrusted.

—A delayed telegram spoiled J. M. Harris' chances for election to the office of County Commissioner of Schools. We hope to see Mr. Harris take legal action in the matter. Too many important telegrams are delayed between here and Lansing. Somebody is to blame and should be made to smart for it.—Boyne Citizen. The writer of this is a complete and perfectly developed liar. The same may Campbell—after the election of Mrs. Beach, expressed himself as highly pleased with the result, and said it was just as it should be.

—The way the Charlevoix Democrat lies of "Charlevoix" Charlevoix is just understanding. In its last issue it conveyed the idea that the Tiffenburg Mills are shut down permanently. If it were true it better remain unsaid, like numerous other things that appear in its columns and those of its auxiliary, the Daily Reporter, but it is not true. The shut down is only temporary, like hundreds of other mills throughout the country. A miller has been engaged, and in a few weeks the mill will start up and run as usual. The object in shutting down was to work off the large stock on hand. The mill is open at all times, and will continue to do, and grinds now certain days of the week.

At the Belvedere: E. G. Bell, Chicago; Mrs. W. B. Pratt and daughter, Mrs. J. C. Lane, Mrs. J. P. Primley, Elkhart, Ind.; J. M. Fowler and family, Lafayette, Ind.; J. E. McKrigan and family, St. Louis.

At the Blue Bells cottage, G. S. Allen and wife, and Mrs. Clement.

Lizzie, Mary and Alfred Wolfeman are on the grounds.

J. L. Sebring and family, of Kalamazoo, are at their cottage, with Mrs. M. H. Clark, of Milwaukee, and Miss Maggie Crogan, of Kalamazoo, as guests.

Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Dunbar, of Kalamazoo, parents of the Colonel and his gallant brother, are at the Belvedere.

Geo. C. Mahon and wife have as guests their daughter, Mrs. Stanley, and children, of Detroit, and Miss A. E. Johnson, principal of the Bradford, (N. H.) Academy.

Mrs. O. A. Sears, of Saginaw, will occupy her cottage the last week in July.

Prof. Samuel Brooks and wife are at their cottage, with Mrs. VanVleck, of Detroit, domiciled with them.

C. H. Walbridge and family, of Toledo, will arrive to-morrow to occupy C. Y. Cook's cottage.

D. A. Waterman and family, of Detroit, will be in their cottage to-morrow.

S. H. Randall and family, of Cincinnati, will arrive to-morrow and occupy the Sutleff cottage.

Base Ball.

Yesterday our boys met with a reverse with the East Jordan club, the easier combination coming off victors by a score of 16 to 15.

At eleven o'clock the Charlevoix Club had them in chancery by 7 to 3, but the up-lake fellows made a spurt, and sent our lads to grass by one majority. The reason assigned is that Charlevoix was two of their best players short.

The boys play with Boyne City today.

Fourth of July.

After all Charlevoix is to have a genuine old-fashioned celebration on the 4th. An excellent program has been provided, and it is expected to make it a big event.

Hon. Charles R. Whitman, of Ann Arbor, Regent of the Michigan University and State Railroad Commissioner, will deliver an address.

Mr. Whitman is one of the leading speakers of Southern Michigan, and the address will be worth hearing.

The Board Will Meet in Charlevoix July 16th.

When the Board of Supervisors adjourned at Boyne City last week, it was to meet in Charlevoix July 16th.

The object of the July meeting is to act on the bridge petition of the C. & W. M. Railroad Co.

Chicago Summer Resort.

Nobody at the Club House yet but the hotel force. About fifty guests will arrive to-morrow on the Soo.

J. P. Wilson and family are at their cottage.

Norwood Notes.

Go with the band to Petoskey the Fourth.

The lawn social Tuesday evening was a decided success. More good looking people were congregated in Mr. and Mrs. Wood's parlors and spacious grounds, and thoroughly enjoyed themselves too, then we have seen in a long time. To Mr. Wood's people, and to all who attended, the band boys feel very grateful.

The "Owl's Nest" is just about full of young "Owls," and owls of all sizes. They took possession of their nest last Sunday.

Arrived on the Lawrence Sunday, for the season, Mrs. S. H. Chase and family, Misses Flora and Louise Sauer, and Master Frank Sauer, all of Chicago, and Miss Lillian Ferguson, of Milwaukee.

The schooner Starke loaded and left for Milwaukee Friday. Monday a telegram was received saying she had collided and capsized, losing her deck-load. Mr. Nash left at once for Milwaukee. The cargo was not insured.

Lawn social receipts Tuesday night twenty five dollars.

Mrs. A. S. Van Sicklen and children, of Burlington, Vt., and Miss Caro Mosch of Boston will arrive today to stay for the summer.

The shingle mill will commence on the season's run next week.

Go to Petoskey with the Norwood band the 4th.

Smoke the "Hill Scott," the only "Hand-Made" Sumatra wrapper nickle cigar in Michigan.

WAR OVER A HORSE THIEF.

Six Thousand Men Ready to Shoot Down Sheriffs.

The Governor of Nebraska and the sheriff of Wyoming are marshaling over a horse thief named Hughes. The former is supposed to be hiding in a distant Indian camp in the Dakotas, and the latter claims the right to take him, but instead takes the Nebraska man himself, and he is now in the penitentiary. Governor Thayer, of Nebraska, has called upon the Governor of Wyoming to release Hughes, but the latter has refused, and Governor Thayer has called out the militia to protect the rights of his citizens. Governor Thayer has ordered 6,000 men to be mobilized near Niobrara, the place from which Hughes was taken, and has ordered Governor Richards, of Wyoming, to release Hughes and send him back to Niobrara, and has ordered the sheriff who made the arrest to be indicted by the grand jury for kidnapping. Governor Richards has ordered the militia of Wyoming to be mobilized to prevent Wyoming citizens being taken out of the state in which he is purposed to place Hughes, and then Governor Thayer has issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens of Nebraska to assist the militia in the execution of the laws, and has ordered the militia to be in readiness to march to the Niobrara country at a moment's notice. The Governor of Wyoming has issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens of Wyoming to be in readiness to march to the Niobrara country at a moment's notice. Governor Thayer has sent a telegram to Governor Richards, of Wyoming, in which he says he has ordered his troops to the Niobrara country, and that they will be mobilized near Niobrara. Governor Thayer says that he has ordered the militia there to be in readiness to shoot down the militia of Wyoming if they attempt to take Hughes out of the state. Governor Richards has ordered the militia of Wyoming to be in readiness to march to the Niobrara country at a moment's notice. The Governor of Wyoming says that he will place himself at the head of the militia of Wyoming and march them to the Niobrara country if necessary to enforce the laws of Wyoming against the action of the Governor of Nebraska. The Governor of Nebraska says that he will place himself at the head of his troops and march them to the Wyoming line if necessary to enforce the laws of Nebraska against the action of the Governor of Wyoming. The Governor of Wyoming says that he will place himself at the head of his troops and march them to the Nebraska territory if necessary to enforce the laws of Wyoming against the action of the Governor of Nebraska. The Governor of Nebraska says that he will place himself at the head of his troops and march them into Wyoming if necessary to enforce the laws of Nebraska against the action of the Governor of Wyoming. The Governor of Wyoming says that he will place himself at the head of his troops and march them into Nebraska

The Masonic Home.

Concerning the absence of St. John's Day at the Masonic Home, the Grand Rapids Democrat, of the 25th says: John H. Jennings reached the Home yesterday afternoon and was told that the American flag had been unfurled and was floating from the flag-staff in his honor, the old gentleman cried like a child. Looking into the face of William Dunham, president of the Board of Trustees, he said: "When I came to Michigan twenty years ago, Dunham, with $20, met us in cash, I little thought that I would come here as first inmate of the Home. Life's wheel brings many changes."

Shortly before noon, Jacob Barth drove upon Cass street and got Mr. and Mrs. Jennings and drove them out to the Masonic Home, where they entered as its first inmates. Four years ago Mr. Jennings started to build a home for indigent Masons, their widows and children in the state; then he had wealth; yesterday he entered the very same institution which his kindness of heart had been instrumental in erecting, a paralytic, broken in body, purse and mind.

He spent the greater part of the afternoon in an invalid chair on the east piazza, where he could enjoy the breeze and watch the steamers on the lake. Himself and wife have room 1 and 2 on the first floor to the right of the main entrance and facing to the west. Both rooms are large and airy, furnished in oak, having a fireplace and steam radiator, for heating and are lighted by gas. Each room has two large windows, opening on the west porch, and are as pleasant quarters as are to be found in the building. Mr. Jenning is a thirty-three degree Mason, the highest in the order, a member of Grand River Lodge, No. 31; and past commander-in-chief of DeWitt Clinton consistory. On March 16, he celebrated his 72 birthday.

No wonder Mr. Fridlender was so anxious to save his "honor." He has so little that he can't afford to lose any.

There are good prospects that there will be an abundance of fruit this season, for canning purposes; and it is certain that there will be an abundance of sugar, at low prices to use with the fruit. The prices charged for sugar will be "McKinley prices."

The Democratic newspapers are greatly worried over the question whether Blaine or Harrison or some other statesman will be nominated by the Republicans in 1892. They are not at all troubled about the Democratic nominee. They know the matter isn't worth worrying about, as the Democratic nominee, whoever he may be, will be defeated.

The very thing the democracy blew their campaign horns the loudest about, the tariff policy of putting off the important measures until the closing hours, "the best legislation this state has seen in many years has itself been guilty of. Verily, the ways of the democracy in this state are beyond all understanding.—Lansing Republican.

A Dakota correspondent of the Minneapolis Tribune, in writing about Senator Farwell's rain theory, says: "We exploded about 100 pounds of dynamite a week or ten days ago and it has been raining ever since. Now the question with us is how to stop it. If the senator has any project we should like to know it." This part of the business seems to have been overlooked.

Senator Stockbridge is quoted in a Chicago interview as saying that "Michigan is Republican, and the Democrats will do well not to count on securing her electoral vote in 1892." That Michigan is a fact which no one seriously questions. Even the Squawbucks recognized this fact when they passed the Miner electoral iniquity. But Senator Stockbridge, when he expresses confidence that the Republican party will secure the electoral vote of Michigan in 1892 evidently forgets that the Democrats, by means of this same Miner iniquity have stolen a part of the electoral vote of this state, for 1892. If that outrageous law is permitted to stand, the Republican party could only secure the entire entire vote of the state by carying every congressional district—which of course is not to be expected. This is precisely what the Miner scheme was devised for—to steal a part of the electoral vote, the Squawbucks being fully aware of the fact that the state at large will be safely Republican in 1892.

The Grand Rapids Democrat says that the C. & W. M have determined to place a double swing bridge of two standing on a center pier across Elk River.

WHAT A DYNAMO IS.

Explanation of the Action of Alternating Currents in Electric Lighting.

The first dynamo-electric machine ever constructed was that made by Faraday, says Knowledge. This great physicist, the prince of experimenters, he has been noted, discovered that when a disc of the plate of copper was made to rotate between the poles of a powerful magnet electric sparks were produced in the plate from the center outward. By making a wire touch the revolving plate with one of its ends and bringing the other one in contact with the rim he found that a current of electricity passed along the wire and could be made to indicate its existence by deflecting the needle of a galvanometer, decomposing a chemical solution, or by any of the well-known effects produced by electricity in motion.

Faraday saw the importance of this discovery and the great uses in the way of practical application to which it might be put, but he did not himself stay to develop it; he left that to others, and with it the wealth which might thus be acquired, and himself went on to investigate other obscure and little known phenomena connected with physics and electricity, regarding this as his proper work and exhibiting in his conduct the true scientific spirit. When many years afterward he went to see the first application of this discovery of his in the production of the illumination of the North Foreland lighthouse he said, after looking at the large magnet—electric machines there: "I gave it to you as infant; you have made it a giant."

Dynamo and magneto electric machines consist essentially of a coil of wire—"the armature," as it is called—rotating between the poles of a large magnet, the poles being bent round so as to approach each other and have the armature between them. This magnet may be either a permanent magnet of hard steel or an electro-magnet consisting of wire coiled round a soft iron core, a current of electricity being made to circle round the wire coil, and thus magnetizing the iron core while it lasts. It is the latter arrangement which is almost universally used now, though the magnets smaller with permanent magnets were the earliest form.

A magnet produces an influence in the neighborhood around it, and this surrounding neighborhood is known as the "field of force" of the magnet—i. e., the sphere in which its influence can be felt. A magnetic needle or bit of iron filing placed in this field set itself to point along the "lines of force" of the field—that is, the lines along which the magnetic force acts, and which form curves round the magnet, running out, as it were, from pole to pole and curving round to the other. Any one may see the form of these lines of force for himself by placing a bar-magnet underneath a sheet of paper and then sprinkling iron-filings on the paper.

On tapping this the filings will set themselves along the lines of force in beautiful regular curves. Here the small fragments of iron are for themselves made magnets while under the influence of the powerful magnet in whose "field" they are, and therefore place themselves lengthways along the lines of force—that is, along the line of action of the resultant magnetic force at the place where each one is.

When a coil of wire or armature is made to revolve rapidly in the strong field of force which occupies the space between the poles of a powerful electro-magnet, currents are produced in the coil. These currents alter their direction through the coil every time the latter changes its position with reference to the poles of the magnet. The side of the coil which was opposite the north pole is after half a revolution opposite the south pole, and the influence of the south pole tends to produce an opposite current to that of the north pole. Here we have an "alternate current" dynamo machine.

As the coil or armature rotates with great speed—some hundreds of revolutions per minute—these currents, in alternating directions, succeed each other very rapidly, and if an electric arc-lamp is placed on the circuit it will be lit up. In this case it is not necessary that the current be sent round the circuit in one direction only, but although the terminals of the lamp are constantly changing their polarity—that is, the north pole where the current enters the next instant becomes the south pole where the current leaves—yet, as this occurs many times in one second the effect produced is the same as if the current was in one uniform direction.

The lamp has no time to get cool; it does not go out before the oppositely directed current passes through it and produces the same effect as the previous one. No flickering is observable. The impression produced by the glowing carbon on the human eye is retained by the retina for a far longer period than the duration of one surge of electricity through the lamp, and is not gone before the effect produced by the succeeding opposite wave makes its impression on our nerves. The Jablochkoff lamps used lately on the Thames embankment are meant for this system of electric lighting with alternating currents.

In a "continuous current" dynamo, which is necessary for some purposes, such as electroplating, where the effect desired could not be produced if the direction of the current was continually altering, the electric current is made to pass always one way round the external circuit. This result is got by using the ingenious device of a commutator, which automatically reflects the current so as always to run into the external circuit in the same direction, as the case may be.

This commutator consists simply of a split tube, which is attached to the revolving armature, and may be seen in any dynamo working on the continuous system. This tube revolves with the revolving armature, and it is divided by an insulating substance into two parts, each half is alternately on the left and right of the space between the poles of the magnet, and the "brushes" which collect the current from the armature—i. e., the bundles of copper wire spread out like a brush which form each end of the outer circuit—are fixed in position, and the revolving commutator attached to the armature brings alternately one or the half-tubes into contact with a brush. Then the half of the commutator which receives the current changes at the same time that the direction of the current through the coils of the armature is reversed; in this way the current sent out to the brush which receives the electric current from the armature is always in the same direction.

It is reported that $50,000,000 of British capital is invested in Paraguay.

SHERMAN'S GALLANTRY.

An Incident Described by a Lady Showing A Fine Quality in the Old Soldier.

When in New York two summers ago "The Brigands," a new opereta was being played by Lillian Russell at the Casino, and attracting great crowds every night. The weather was intensely hot and the entire audience would leave the auditorium and go in the roof garden which was laid out as a garden, filled with choice potted plants and flowers and illuminated from the sides with colored globes, making a most novel and effective appearance. Tables were set out among the palms and beneath trailing vines, and those who wished could get besides a bunch of fresh air, a glass of squilibaric water or an ice. A small elevator conveyed the visitors to the roof and returned them to whichever floor their seats were on. Stepping into the elevator with others one evening my attention was directed by hearing the elevator boy refuse admittance to a young gentleman, who had just handed in a lady handsomely dressed.

"But I can not be separated from my company," persisted the young man.

"I can not take more than twelve, and you make fourteen," replied the boy.

The lady proposed to get out, but the gentleman was equally determined to remain in, saying: "The more couldn't make any difference, and the music would be over if they did not go up at once."

While waiting their decision, the elevator boy quietly as observined as the young man, a tall, white-haired gentleman wearing a slouched hat, who stood near me quietly moved to the door and passed out, saying: "Now, my boy, your load is lightened; go ahead."

The handsome woman who was still arguing with her escort turned and quickly exclaimed: "Xo, General Sherman, we will get out!"

The General, however, passed out into the crowd, the lady following on with the young man, still protesting against the General's leaving.

The elevator boy shut the door, and we moved quickly to the roof, but I was ahead of the elevator crowd, had a good look at the old hero, and quite a murmur of applause was heard over the General's gallantry.

Tramp and Violin.

A downtown music store in Lewiston was surprised recently at the entrance of a tramp—a ragged, veteran tramp—who said he was not vicious, but only unfortunate, says the Journal.

"What brings you come into a music store?" asked the proprietor. The tiny cheeks of the tramp flushed as he said: "I am a musician. Having said that he played the violin, they handed him one, and he laid a loving cheek against the fiddle and drew a bow of finished power across the trembling strings. For half an hour he played to a rapt audience, prelude with the skill of the improvisator and weaving the theme into many an airy fancy of the string. Sometimes he marched up and down the floor playing and taking on new light years in him in his eye. His rags were forgotten by all who saw him. His cheeks were flushed and his gray hair was tossed back by an impetuous wave of his head. In the imagery of the strings were pulses of delight and strange the sa of wasted hopes and years. In the pleading voice of the violin one heard a voice of long ago, a mother's tone and a baby's cry. "That's all right," said he, as he laid it down, and a silence fell upon all around, broken by the spontaneous vows of the tramp aforesaid. "Give me the price of a supper."

Hard to Understand.

People who always call their dreams to other people in the morning never seem to get over their surprise because other people are not as much interested in them as they are themselves.—Somerville Journal.

THE WINDOW GARDEN.

Some Seasonable Hints as to Its Formation by an Expert.

Edgar Sanders, the veteran florist, turns, in his department, "Garden and Lawn," in the Prairie Farmer, gossips thus wise of the window garden:

Plants in the dwelling are evidently on the increase. Pass down almost any street and many of the windows will be seen to have some kind of greenery within. Even city stores have plants, often used as part of the attraction—and why not? As cities become larger the less green trees and grass one can see without going away out into the outskirts to find them. A bit of nature's green introduces at almost any position you place it, while there are plenty of florists' nowadays to grow the kind of plants suitable for the purpose. It is seldom "opening" days are allowed to pass without the attraction of plants and flowers as well as the goods exposed for sale. Even art galleries when any special attraction is going on find nooks, that with deft hands lend special enchantment by the use of a few palms and other fine foliage plants, with a very few fine, long-stemmed flowers for bits of natural coloring. The old-fashioned English ivy, specialist, standing in a bracket near enough to have the living green twined over it, or perhaps trained across a pier glass, running up or even falling down carefully at the side of a window, with perhaps a single palm or fine begonia as a center object, is a modest but effective bit of green tracery.

Those who like grand and perfect specimens of plants rather than a mixed medley of small pots need only keep them away from others to get them. Plants cannot grow shapely in the window any more than weeds if packed close together. Side light is what every plant seeks for; if it cannot get it at the sides then it will have bare stems with a bushy head of leaves at the top, like the trees at the woods. You may group enough of these naked stemmed plants together, with the tall at the back and the shorter at the sides so as to make an effective group; as a whole, but no individuality of expression of particular plants. Except you have a fancy for this kind of beauty better grow fewer but perfect specimens.

Another thing—a medley of small, ill-shaped plants, however well arranged, do not harmonize with rich furniture, although not so noticeable in the kitchen or the sitting-room of the cottage. Think of these things and see if it is not so.

Some smokers have an idea that "tobacco heartburn" can be cured by swallowing the whole ashes from the end of a cigar. Chemists say that it is merely faith cure.

FARMERS, READ THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any farm load this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implements, have become familiar with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we assure you at whatever other, we have secured the best and latest improved machine to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and exclusive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better articles for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these propositions, and if you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER I.

HAUNTED HALL PORHOUSE.

"Schoolmarm, time for morning exercises. When? Land, of this is Harrowville nearthreatening, and the people didn't notice lightnin' than the outside, and I've got to say is it's the almighty shame."

"Sky?"

"Sky, course sky! DIDN'T we tell, I just drawed up?"

The speaker stopped immediately out of his wagon, a lumbering affair, not it had two spirited horses, and that, though he as their driver said, "a fortune on their backs." The driver looked keenly at the man who was frowning upon him.

"This is the poorhouse, ain't it?"

"Yes."

The word was snapped out. The man who was bending on the end of the wagon tongue looked up.

"Well, now, you, Flora, strong minded brain? Who ever heard tell where the building had gonnaze with a stable on the side? Leastways, I ain't."

"Oh, nothin, nothin'. Only I'm hear a little before my time. I've come of the bilin, I mean, you'd at—kind and schoolgirlish for me to come early. Mr. Jake—no, Mr. Jake—I mean Mr. Dick, Mr. Dick, I'm sorry I'm late."

"That's my name, sir."

"Look! I—I—"

"I said so, sir."

"And I said so, sir. Now, Mr. Jonathan, Well, I'm glad I've found you. Mr. Dick, I'm sorry I'm late. Mr. Jake, I'm sorry I'm late. Mr. Jonathan, I'm sorry I'm late."

The driver, leaning in the pocket and pressing an enormous chew against his cheek, "Mr. Jonathan" is—land and schoolgirls for me, I don't know. Mr. Jonathan, Mr. Jake—no, Mr. Jonathan I guess I'd be Mr. Dick."

Oscar Johnson, a Norwegian farmer bought a keg of beer at Frankfort and started home with it. A gang of his drunken countrymen intercepted him and tried to steal his beer. He resisted with a knife, when his assailants knocked him down and stamped on him until he was unconscious. Johnson's friends vow vengence, but no arrests have been made.

John Longnecker, a young man who has been employed for the past year on the farm of F. N. Hill near Yuba in Grand Traverse county, disappeared Sunday morning while the family were at church. His coat, watch and money were left on his bed. No alarm was felt till as the days passed he did not return, when searching parties were sent out. His body was found in the woods in a dense underbrush, shot through the heart, the revolver beside him. The coroner's verdict was one of suicide. Longnecker has a mother and sister at Bryant, Ind. He was about twenty-seven years old.

Grand Rapids Democrat special 23d. During the past few years Traverse City has become the business headquarters for this section of Michigan, and a synagogue was built on the bank of the river, near the central part of the city, a few years ago. From that date trouble began among the Hebrews. The German Hebrews claiming that the Russian Hebrews did not keep up their dues, wished to control business affairs, but the Russians being in the majority, elected their own officers and started to run things to suit themselves. Last Friday, when the new president attempted to take the chair, he found the sheriff there before him. Affairs culminated last night in the synagogue in a free fight, in which the candlesticks and chairs took a prominent part. The following were seriously hurt: A. Chon, deep scalp wound, Louis Steinberg, cut about face; S. Yalmanton, scalp wound. Many others were less severely hurt. The following are under arrest: Max Orgel, Louis Steinberg, Peter Sandleman, Meyer Sandleman, Isaac Sandleman, Herman Fisher, Sam Fisher, Sam Harris. Warrents are out for the arrest of fifteen others. Some of our most prominent and leading merchants were in the affray. Their grievances will be aired in Justice Brown's court, Thursday. Everything is quiet to-day, but it would not surprise the townspeople to wake up some morning and find the synagogue standing on its head in the river.

The Preston National Bank of Detroit.

This bank was established by David Preston in 1852 under the firm name of David Preston & Co. In June, 1889, the present organization was incorporated under the National Bank Act of the United States with the following board of directors: R. W. Gillett, F. W. Hayes, C. A. Black, Wm. H. Elliott, James E. Davis, James D. Standish, H. S. Pingree, A. E. F. White, W. D. Preston, W. R. Burrell and John Canfield; and the following officers: R. W. Gillett, President; F. W. Hayes, Vice-President; J. D. Gilmore, Cashier. The capital of the bank is $1,000,000. Accounts of mercantile and commercial houses, manufacturing establishments, private individuals and firms are received, and the bank discounts approved commercial paper, and loans money on satisfactory names or collaterals, at market rates. With a representative board of directors the needs of those keeping commercial accounts with this bank have careful, intelligent and prompt consideration. It is the desire of the management to make the bank an important and successful factor in the healthy development of the commerce and manufactures of Detroit and Michigan, and thereby promote the bank's interests as well as the general prosperity. Widows and women having separate estates, desiring to transact their own financial business, are afforded every convenience of the bank's several departments, and its officers cheerfully render assistance desired on the matter of buying and selling investment securities, and information upon subject, of business, value of stocks, bonds, securities, etc.

Special accounts from capitalists, trustees, executiles, administrators, guardians, agents and others having funds in their possession for investment or safe keeping are received, and proper rates of interest paid on moneys so deposited. This feature of the bank's business is conducted on the plans pursued by the large English banks.

The bank has its own accounts in London, Paris Berlin, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Vienna, Amsterdam, Stockholm, Rome, and all the other principal cities of the European Continent. It also issues its own Letters of Credit, available to travelers in all parts of the world, and same may be secured at any time during banking hours, and they have proven a source of great convenience to the Bank. The issuance of Commercial Letters of Credit to merchants and others who wish to make purchases in foreign markets, has also proven one of the worthy and enterprising features of its large and constantly increasing business. It is the only bank in the State prepared to do in its own name, all branches of the banking business. The building occupied is one of the handsomest and best appointed in Detroit, its office accommodations being especially well adapted, and affording every convenience and facility for the transaction of the various details of business of the bank's several departments.

The wood work by Kilpatrick, is a masterpiece of skill, but the painting and ornamentation, by Jarvis, is elaborate and artistic. It speaks of cultivated taste and a skillful brush. Jarvis is coming to the front in his profession.

—Retail dealers in cigars would do well to study the law enacted by the congress regarding the stamp cigars. Section 2,962 of the revised statutes say that cigars must be sold to the customer direct from the properly stamped box. A dealer who will take out a beautiful of cigars and lay them before the buyer to choose from, or a saloonkeeper who takes a customer a cigar on a plate or in a glass, makes himself liable to a fine of $100.

—Boyne Falls Inspirit: The meeting of the supervisors on July 16th, is to be help in Charlevoix. Why? The people of Boyne City does not intrude on their meditations of public good, but the bustle of Charlevoix might be confusing. We are not the least suspicious, but we do hope these best men of Charlevoix county won't think it best to ask the consent of the people to allow them to hold their future home to the attractions of the C. & W. M.

—Our contemporary up the street comes back at the SENTINEL by saying that the Democrat never said anything concerning Charlevoix that was not true. Probably the other papers in this county outside of Charlevoix might make the same claim. The SENTINEL is content to rest in the claim that it never said anything that good of Charlevoix; there is plenty of that to talk about, without dragging around the edges to find something unpleasant to say. That is the kind of a boomlet we are sonsty.

Volume XXIII, No. 1.

With this number the SENTINEL begins its twenty-third volume; and permit us to observe that the SENTINEL is all right.

It is square on both feet, with nothing in its past history to be ashamed of, and much to be proud of. The history of the SENTINEL is the history of Charlevoix. When Charlevoix county came into being, and Charlevoix was yet to be, the SENTINEL was born.

Its controlling impulse all these years has been CHARLEVOIX. Its pride and boast for nearly a quarter of a century has been the Pine Lake region.

Dame Fortune has at times been fickle, but the clouds have never been so heavy that we could not see a silver lining.

The SENTINEL is, and always has been, a champion of Charlevoix, and has never faltered or crooked.

Dear reader, we salute you.

The Fourth.

Notwithstanding extensive celebrations all about us, the day was a big one in Charlevoix. The weather was all that could be desired, and the town was full of people and equally full of enthusiasm. There was little or no disorder—only one man bringing up in the cooler.

The program was carried out as near to the letter as "circumstances would permit" one great big fact, circumstances being the loss of our artillery.

But everybody was happy, and the celebration a success.

Our Battery Captured.

For several years Charlevoix has been the proud and happy possessor of a "pup-cannon." On the morning of each recurring Independence Day for a half decade, it has ushered in the National Anniversary with its patriotic bark. It could boast of no history of deeds upon the battlefield, and never contributed to martial splendor upon avenue or campus. It was home made, from an old propeller shaft; of good metal and more or less symetrical in outline. It was mounted upon the forward wheels of a wagon that had done years of service in the tan bark and cedar post trade. But it could burn powder as successfully, so far as noise was concerned, as the most approved Krupp or Armstrong. When last seen it was on Hatch's dock, awaiting the call from its year's retirement to do service on the 4th of July, 1891. Its ammunition had been provided, and as the rock-crowed, we awaited from its throat the deep-voiced notes that should announce to patriots the dawn of the day of glorious memory. In vain we waited. When the artillery men went for their artillery it was gone, the carriage only remaining. Sadly and tearfully the detail returned with the news and a deep and wet sorrow settled down over the stricken community. The only powder burned that day was that environed by the red paper of the fire cracker, the Roman candle and the sky-piercing rocket. "On army in Flanders" was nothing to our army in Flanders' was but more robust in its artillery. We were the chosen few who were to rend the atmosphere that proud morning. The howitzer was gone, and unadmiredly doing service in some backwoods town; but where? Echo answered, where? But as the day passed, visitors from the region about South Arm reported seeing, in the early morning, heavy reverberation from the direction of the head of the waters tributary to Pleasant Harbor, lying in a south-easterly direction from here, presumably from a town known within the confines of a limited section of Northern Michigan, as East Jordan—a village remembered by old settlers as a guardian aspirant for railroad benefits. The woods which closely surrounded the little burg at the mouth of the Jordan resounded with the boom of our pup-cannon, and silence reigned at the metropolis of Charlevoix county. Every discharge spoke of larceny, and every grief of mock that went from its mouth smelled to heaven of sacrilegious plunder. Patriotism was clouded in venality; the emancipation of liberty was marked with the "star sinister." Under cover of the darkness they stole our gun, and as its resounding voice awoke the people, they laughed at our discomfiture. Would that the thing had been done with them! And now that they have it they will defend it to the death with their sin clubs, as long unused. We will send them the wheels and the ram-rod if they will in true patriotic devotedness confess their sin. But it was a blasted mean trick.

Mrs. A. S. Norman is attending Dr Dougla's sanitarium in Petoskey for medical treatment.

John Kewagoshkum, who is working on the railroad bought a half pint of tincture of arnica to bathe his horses' shoulders. During the forenoon some of the men discovered the bottle in his coat pocket, and having the Hay(es) fever pretty badly, they unstuck it for old Bourbon and began a raid on it. One after another slyly took a drink until the bottle was nearly emptied. Nobody got drunk but there were some rugy sick men on the ground by noon and a very mad Indian.

TO BUY UP AMERICAN WHEAT

English and French capitalists Propose to Control the Supply.

A special cable to the New York Journal of Finance dated London says: "Influential capitalists here and from the French money mart are about to form a syndicate to buy up the entire wheat crop of the United States, with a view to a corner in the supply. The project is being urged by Mr. Pierpont Morgan, who is in Paris, and is supported by the Rothschilds and other leading financiers. The idea is to buy up the wheat in the United States, and then to hold it for a long time for a big profit. The syndicate will be formed in the United States and will have been formed.

DRESS REFORM A FAILURE

Jennie Miley's Establishment in the Hands of the Sheriff.

Three big sheriff's sales of stock of the fifth avenue, New York, and partners were holding them with handles of the machines, packages of glassware and trimmings, piles of dresses, bonnets, ribbons and other office furniture. The store has been occupied for about two years by the Jennie Miley Model Dress Company, and has been the headquarters of the women's dress reform movement. The establishment was a fine one, and the extravagance is in the hands of the Sheriff. Mrs. Miley herself is in Europe, and it is said that her husband and partners have been brought against extravagance.

COLD COMFORT FOR PAPA

The Democratic State Convention in Iowa Nominates a Ticket Composed of Men Whose Name Is a Source Of Pride to the Democratic Party—Governor Boies Is Renominated—Other Nominations Made—Prohibition Discussed to Right and Left—Other Conventions.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 27.—The Democratic State Convention of Iowa put in an appearance here today and nominated a ticket composed of men whose name is a source of pride to the Democratic party. The platform adopted declares for the free coinage of silver, denounces the Republican tariff bill as a robber measure, favors the Australian system of voting, opposes the Lodge election bill, favors a low tariff, and refuses either to endorse or condemn the action of the Chicago anarchists.

Governor Boies was renominated by acclamation on the first ballot, and will not be interfered with.

'MID WILD APPLAUSE.

MAJOR M'KINLEY IS UNANIMOUSLY NOMINATED.

The Ohio Republican Convention Marched to Harmony and Enthusiasm—Perfect Unity of Action Was Displayed Throughout Which the Eight Will Be Made.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 26.—Harmony was established by acts of three months of disruption and discord, and the Republican party of Ohio was reunited in the work of the campaign. For the first time probably, in the history of the State no contest was made on the floor of the convention. Not a single ballot was taken, not a single name was presented except that of the man who is the choice of the party for Governor, and who is the choice of the party throughout the country for President, and who will be the nominee of the party for President if he shall live and be a candidate.

The nominee was nominated by acclamation, and the nomination was made with a unanimous and enthusiastic shout of approval from the 1,000 delegates and the thousands who filled the galleries of the Music Hall.

The nominee of the party for President was not present, but he was represented by his nephew, Mr. Abner McKinley, who read a telegram from the Governor, in which he said that he was in Canton, and could not be present, but that he was in perfect accord with the purposes and determination of the revolutionists."

The platform adopted by the convention is as the principal officers, are said to be, a declaration of war against the party of the revolutionary forces.

THE PLATFORM.

McKinley Law and the National Administration Indorsed—The Legislature Censured.

The text of the platform adopted

The Republican party of Ohio, in convention assembled, indorses and reaffirms its adherence to the principles which have always been the guiding star of the party in promoting the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States. We indorse, in the spirit of the Republican party, and in the time-honored Republican way, the McKinley bill as the action of the party in the interest of the people, and we congratulate the people of this country that the Republican party is able to adopt a tariff law which will bring to our people the largest prosperity.

Nominations were delivered in other and extended speeches by Senator Foraker, Congressman Grosvenor, Congressman Ketcham, Chairman of the Committee, I have contributed to the success of the party in Ohio, and I will have been rewarded.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

A STATEMENT prepared at the Pension office shows that during the week ending June 13, just, there were 1,700 pensions allowed, including reissues, 1,000 original pensions, 200 on account of the war of 1812, and 1,000 on account of the war of 1861 and 1865 and the act of June 27, 1890.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Among those who breathed the funeral of Gladstone, Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister, Lord Rosebery, the premier of Parliament, Mr. Carlisle, Mr. Morley, Mr. Parnell and Healy. After the funeral a disturbance took place in which Mr. Healy received a black eye in the face. His assailant was a young gentleman.

It is understood that one of the first measures to be introduced in the House of Commons when it shall assemble, will be one by Mr. Gladstone, on whose behalf the Queen's speech will be read at the close of the Red Cross and heal the wounds of the Irish, and to bring back to their own fold the Parnellites.

WESTERN HAPPENINGS.

RECENTLY James Waggoner, of Cheyenne, Wyoming, was taken from his home by three masked men and hung to a tree. The other day Mrs. Waggoner received a letter from a friend in Texas, in which it was stated that her husband was alive and in good health. The letter was written by a man who was in the band of men who hanged Waggoner.

WELL CALLED TYRANT

IS BALMACEDA, THE CHILIAN DICTATOR.

A Veritable Reign of Terror Said to Exist in Valparaiso—Stories Are Circulated Of Secret Called "Valparaiso" to the Republic—Other Republics Have Had Similar Disasters.

Most startling facts in connection with the revolution now raging in Chili, which throw light upon the tyranny and despotism of Balmaceda, are given to the public by three gentlemen, two of whom are Chilians, who arrived last week. The statements that Balmaceda is well named "the tyrant." In Santiago, where his headquarters are, no one dares to utter a word against him. He has created a reign of terror on the island on the houses of any people whom he suspects of being not in sympathy with him, and into those marked residences his police and soldiers go at any hour of the day or night. They ransack the house on the ground that they are looking for revolutionists who are supposed to be hidden there. The soldiers conduct when they leave, after leaving as great a mess as they wish behind, they go to equal the efforts of some other marauding band.

A laborer is caught on the street going to or from work without a tag showing his occupation, he is at once gobbled up by the soldiers of Hainos only to disappear from his sight. This system exists in Valparaiso, and the city is governed by a reign of terror, being among the street men a secret. The SPORT OF THE ESKIMO.

The Man Like in Gamble, Wrestle, Tell Stories, Sing, and Dance.

Next to providing the Eskimo into like to wrestle. The usual way of doing this is a game rather of strength than skill. The wrestlers sit down on the floor, facing any convenient place side by side, and facing in opposite directions, say, with their right elbows touching. Then they lock arms, and each strives to straighten out the other's arms. As the match is usually little bone-gimmed and not infrequently they pop up the skin in the struggle. In the old days when a stranger arrived at a settlement he was invited to wrestle in some way with a villager, and the winner was allowed to kill the loser if he chose to do so.

If less exciting story-telling is really almost as common for an evening's diversion as gambling, says a writer in the N. Y. Sun. The Eskimo traditions are told over and over again. Every one knows them word for word, and should the reciter omit or add a single syllable he would be corrected constantly by some one of the audience. There is nothing like these legends in American except in the work, so called, of certain secret societies, where precisely the same care in repetition is exercised. The reciter of the story sits at one side of the room, and covering his head, turns his face toward the wall away from the assembly before he begins. There is no applause during the recital, nor when he has finished. There are traditions that relate to the early Norse settlers of Greenland, to the origin of the seal and other valuable animals, to the red Indians of North America, beside many stories of love and valor that seem to have no great value in ethnologists, though very interesting as specimens of what may be called the literature of a peculiar people.

The native songs can scarce be called musical, though the Eskimo voice is naturally sweet and fine. The native tunes are monotonous chants, but the Eskimos readily learn the tunes of the whites. In Alaska villages were two good violins, three or four concertinas, and some French harmonicas, most of them out of order, but the skill of the owners of those that suffice or other was equal to that of the best musicians to be found at rural towns in Yankee land.

The Eskimos like the reels better than any other form of dances, and old, old and young, dance with a zest and alacrity that is inspiriting to the spectator. Under the Danish Lutheran teaching this form of amusement has been in no wise discouraged, but the Moravian believed dancing a sin, and held up the terrors of hell before the unfortunate conversants. Some have believed the Moravian story, and to the degenerate influence by which they are surrounded add fear of future torment as a reward for wishing to join the sports of their livelier-hearted neighbors. Many, indeed, forsake the Moravian teachers, but are loon forever haunted by the fear that the practice of a vingedal God may be true after all.

Men and boys play ball, and the two games most popular, if combined, would not vary greatly from Yankee football. The ball is made out of seal skin leather, filled sometimes with sand, clay and sometimes with moss. It is sewed up with seal sinews, and is sometimes ornamented with tufts or tassels and a zone made of strings of bead leather with charms on. The players divide into two parties always—three, up, as Yankee boys would say. Then in one game one side moves the ball, alone, while the other tries to capture it; in the other one side tries to kick the ball over a wide space to a goal, while the other tries to capture and kill the man who it insisted. Sometimes they but it in the latter game instead of kicking it. Near on the west side of Baffin's bay the Eskimos have in winter a house in every village set aside for feasts and dances. It is dome-shaped and about 20 feet in diameter by 15 high. Here the entire population gathers. The married women stand in a row next to the wall, the unmarried women stand next to them, while the men form a third ring inside the rest. The children, or all who are under 12 years, from late geniuses near the entrance. Upon the floor, beaten and boiled meat and soup, with raw seal liver, are passed around as long as any one can eat. This done, a man strips to the waist, takes a drum made something like a tumbe but covered with raw dolphin, and stepping into the center of the ring begins to sing, and dance, and beat the drum. The words of the song are improvised by the singer and are usually satirical. He praises himself and then another of the company for good qualities that are noticeably lacking in the great delight of all the rest, though they know that they will be joined if they have not already been. The dancing is simply a stamping of the feet and a swaying of the body—the motion is ridiculous to any one not an Eskimo. The women join in the chorus, but the men listen in silence.

A Sicilian Tragedy.

The section of the Syracuse (Sicily) graveyard found a young woman dead in the vestibule of the chapel. She was beautiful, handsomely dressed, and appeared to be English or American. Beside her lay an open English letter of four pages, the contents of which were: "I risk you, as many times as you have kissed me and pressed me to my I tear out the heart that has been so false." And, in fact, the woman's breast had been cut open and the heart had been removed. In great day a young man of 30 was found in the graveyard with a revolver shot in his head. The affair has not been explained nor have the bodies been identified.

Big Shearing Machinery.

Probably the largest specimen of shearing machinery in the world is in the plant mill of the Exton works of Cochran, Vaughan & Co. (limited), in England. This machine has blades twelve feet long, and has sheared cold steel plating for Prince's warships up to two and a half inches thick. This machine a plate of steel nine feet wide can be cut right down the middle. The shears weigh 270 tons, and are driven by a 300 horse-power engine.

WHAT IS LEAP YEAR?

How Julius Cæsar and Pope Gregory XIII. Reformed the Calendar.

It may be interesting as well as instructive to some to know just what is meant by leap year, why it is so named, and what gave rise to its origin, says C. Berta in the Gaslotes (Ala.) Leader. The Julian calendar was arranged in the year 46 B. C. by Julius Cæsar upon the supposition that the year consisted of 365 days and 6 hours exactly—but more accurately it is but 365 days 5 hours 48 minutes and a fraction—and reckoning three years to consist of 365 days, gave to the fourth 366. The day thus intercalated every fourth year was inserted after the 24th of February (ante diem sextum kalendas martii), and in consequence of being also reckoned as the sixth day before the kalends of March was styled bissextum, and hence the year itself is termed bissextilem, or in English leap year, because it leaps over or extends others by one day.

The scale of reckoning previous to this time had fallen into much confusion, and this rendered it a very unreliable one, and, as it placed the beginning of the year about two months ahead of the time, as it should be, it was decreed that the year should consist of 365 days, gave to the fourth 366. The day thus intercalated every fourth year was inserted after the 24th of February (ante diem sextum kalendas martii), and in consequence of being also reckoned as the sixth day before the kalends of March was styled bissextum, and hence the year itself is termed bissextilem, or in English leap year, because it leaps over or extends others by one day.

THE EYES OF DEEP-SEA FISH.

Very Large in Some and Wholly Lacking in Other Varieties.

The universal ruling about deep-sea creatures is their strangeness for human visitors. Fish that live at very great depths have either no eyes at all or enormously big ones. Indeed, there are two ways you may get us in these gloomy abysses, by delicate touch organs or by sight that collects the few rays of light due to phosphorescence or other accidental sources.

Now as we go down in the water we find at each depth that the effects produced upon the eyes of fish are steadily progressive in one direction or the other. Species that live at a depth of eighty fathoms have an eye already a good deal bigger than their nearest representatives that live at or near the surface. Down to the depth of 200 fathoms, where daylight disappears, the eyes get constantly bigger and bigger. Beyond that depth small-eyed forms are in, with long feelers developed to supplement the eyes. Signs, in fact, is here beginning to stripping. In the greatest abysses the fish are mostly blind, feeling their way about entirely by their sensitive bodies alone over the naked surface of the rock at the bottom. Some of them have still extinct relics of functionless eyes, in others, the oldest and most conditioned abyssal species, the eye has altogether disappeared externally, though in last improvement may still be recognized imbedded deep in the tissues of the head.

But many deep-sea fish have a curious system of hollows in the skull or along a line on the body, which seem mucous or alone, and this alone often envelopes them completely as in a sheet of jelly, from head to tail. Strange to say, it is phosphorescent. Moreover, many other deep-sea species have two sets of organs buried in their skin, consisting of round shining, opaque bodies, very closely resembling mother-of-pearl. One sort are single and oval, and are placed on the head not far from the eye, the other have several and are ranged in a series along the body and tail, a pair usually answering to each joint of the backbone. All of them are abundantly supplied with nerves, and they seem to be organs for the production and perhaps also for the reception of phosphorescent light. If so, we may suppose that each such fish goes about like a string of glow worms or a train of lighted cars, all the organs along his side or tail shining faintly in the dark waters, and after the fashion of luminous point. Dr. Gunther suggests that in certain cases the phosphorescent organ be produced in some of back examples of the organs, and then emanated in particular directions through the lens in front, precisely as a policeman flashes his bull's-eye on any point. —Popular Magazine.

A Genuine War Dog.

General Wilbraby, now in command of the British forces in Ireland, is an Wellington was a native of that commander and explosive other. Very few seen in his position and of his age—he is not yet fifty-eight—have had so many experiences and narrow escapes. He is a soldier through and through, and out of the very foot. It is tonight, England has had. The son of Major J. G. Wolseley, of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of foot, he entered his profession as ensign at the age of eighteen, and was rapidly promoted. During his first campaigning in Burmah, he and a brother officer were shot down at the head of a storming party. His comps. on blind to death in a few minutes, and his life was saved almost miraculously after months of extreme suffering. In the Crimea, when he was but twenty-one, he was several times wounded. In the Indian Mutiny he distinguished he was knocked down by a solid shot striking near him, and rendered senseless, while these about him were instantly slain. He was picked up for dead, with wounds all over his body. The surgeons abandoned hope, but he did not, and to his determination and fortitude he owed the final recovery with the loss of an eye. A regular war dog, he has fought wherever there has been a chance in Asia and Africa. He is believed to be the man on whom to bear a charmed life and his name is indissolubly connected with victory. Sobriety aside, he has various accomplishments, having written, besides military works, a clever novel, "Marley Castle," and is regarded socially as delightful. The Irish recount, of course, for his many talents by the force of his ability.

Solving a Mystery.

A woman learned a Crawford street car the other day with a basket which had an old check apron tied over the top. She sat down near a boy with a bundle, says the Detroit Free Press, and he no sooner saw the basket than he discovered there was a mystery concealed therein. For the first five minutes the woman wanted to closely that he could do nothing, but the car finally came along to where a street lamp was playing and she half rose up to see. As she did so the boy untied the string and raised the cloth.

"Land of mercy, but what's that?" shouted a man next to him as he jumped up.

"Look out!"

"Let her go, Gallagher!"

"Stop the car!"

It was a thumping big cat. The cloth was no sooner raised than out he popped, ran over the man's knees, and during the next half minute he jumped all—or everybody in that car. He finally came to the rear door, uttered a "spitch" at the conductor, and made a long jump into the street, and ran up a telegraph pole. Everybody looked at the woman and her basket, and she ran out and got off without stopping the car. They everybody looked at the boy, and feeling that a speech of some sort was demanded by the occasion, he said:

"Who's a thought of cats I supposed It was new maple sugar or popcorn."

Dwarf Trees.

French gardeners are now obtaining the same results as the Japanese in the production of dwarf trees, which are in great demand, their fruit being just as perfect and it is and grown on a full-sized tree. Their methods are kept as secret as those in Japan, where one tree from 200 and 300 years old which have been treated in such a manner as to stunt their growth, and prevent them attaining a height of more than twelve inches. These trees are grafted and trained by age, but they bear no trace of the pruning knife, and they constitute an exact representation in miniature of the grand old sycamore, tall, cedar, or apple tree, which line the magnificent city-mile avenue which leads to the sacred cactus of Nikko.

FARMERS, REA[illegible] THIS!!!

If you or any of your neighbors expect to buy a machine, wagon or any thing else that this season remember we will sell you the BEST goods in the market at prices guaranteed to be below any one who sells FIRST QUALITY as we do, and handle nothing else.

We say best goods for least money.

Yes, HERE ARE THE WHY'S

We can sell you the best article in the country, BECAUSE we have devoted several years of the best part of our lives to this particular business, have handled almost every make and grade of implements, have become acquainted with the advantages of each, and the faults of all, and therefore stand in a position TO KNOW which is best and in all cases we assure you at wholesale effort, we have secured the best and latest improved machine with which to supply our customers. Experience is our school and it has taught us the best, and to have it at any cost.

We can sell the goods cheaper than anyone else BECAUSE we devote our entire and exclusive attention to this business, buy in car load lots and thereby obtain every possible advantage in purchasing and in freights, and owing to the great quantities we sell, can certainly afford to sell better articles for less money than those who buy in small quantities and who only handle the goods as a side issue.

Consider these propositions, and it you think them sound and logical, come and see our Reapers, Binders, Harrows, Plows, Buggies and Wagons, repairs and attachments for all. Remember the place.

BRAVE MEN WHO MET UPON THE FIELD OF BATTLE.

Thrilling Stories of the Rebellion—Old Soldiers and Sailors Recite Interesting Reminiscences of Life in Camp and on the Field.

General Sheridan's Ride.

AT the battle of Pea Ridge, in March, 1862, the troops of General Curtis consisted of four divisions and a small force of cavalry. They held twelve thousand men, and were the best and most very extensive people in the north-west part of Arkansas, in the Sugar Creek Valley. The division of General Jeff C. Davis was stationed behind Little Sugar Creek, covering the road from Fayetteville, Ark., by Elkhorn Tavern to Springfield. The division of General Carr was about twelve miles south at Cross Hollows, and a detachment of this division had been sent about twenty-five miles east from that place to Huntsville.

The first and second divisions formed the right wing under General Franz Sigel were stationed two miles north-west of Pea Ridge at Bentonville, and moved from there about five miles forward to Leetown on Pea Ridge. The whole line from Huntsville to Bentonville was extended about fifty miles. Against this line the Confederates under Van Dorn, Price and McCulloch began their attack on the Twenty-fourth from the Arkansas River to Fayetteville at the beginning of March. They outnumbered from six to one. The Twenty-fourth under General Albert Pike and two mounted regiments, numbered about 10,000 men, of whom, however, only about fifty-five per cent took part in the battle where followed.

There were many deliberations of the movement, but nothing definite was known until the 6th of March. General Curtis advised General Sigel that the enemy was evidently advancing north. This was confirmed at midnight of that same day when a Confederate consisting of the Second Missouri Infantry, some artillery and cavalry under Colonel Schnetzer captured Keitsch's farm, six miles south of Bentonville and brought a small party of prisoners to General Sigel at the Leetown headquarters. Sigel's division was ordered to General Sigel at the Leetown headquarters. Sigel's division was ordered to General Sigel at the Leetown headquarters. Sigel's division was ordered to declare certain abstracts of the records of the county of Charlevoix public records.

WHEREAS, A large portion of the records of the county of Charlevoix were destroyed by fire in the year eighteen hundred and eighty seven; and

WHEREAS, An abstract of said records had previously been made, by and under the direction of A. E. Upright, formerly register of deeds of the said county, and others; and

WHEREAS, The said abstract has been purchased by the board of supervisors of the aforesaid county and is now deposited in the office of the register of deeds of said county, as the property thereof.

SECTION 1. The people of the State of Michigan enact, That the said abstract be and the same hereby is declared to be and is established as a public record, and in all the courts of this State, and in all suits and proceedings therein, and before all officers of this State having jurisdiction in such suits proceedings, the same may be read and shall be received, and admitted in evidence of the matters therein stated, and that the title to any real property described therein vested in the person or persons, shown to be the owner thereof by said abstract at the time of the loss of said record to the extent that the said abstract vested title in them, and shall have the same virtue and effect as by the provisions of law the records of the office of the register of deeds possess.

During the regular Monday meeting of Baptist ministers in Chapel hall in Boston on the 22d, the Rev. J. H. Stoddard addressed the conference, at its suggestion, upon the influence of secret societies upon the church, and in the course of his remarks strongly denounced Masonry, declaring that when a man swears allegiance to it he swears allegiance to a code antagonistic to God. The Rev. Mr. Cleveland of Melrose, who was in the audience, came to a point of order, and with suppressed emotion said: "I am a mason and have listened to this scathing stigmatism of the order in patience, but I can't listen to this unjust and uncalled-for abuse."

Chairman Moxan put the question to the meeting on sustaining the point of order and it was defeated 70 to 7. Instantly Mr. Cleveland rose and addressing the secretary said: I request that you drop my name from the roll of membership of this conference. I do not care to be a member of any body that refuses to sustain any decent point of order." Then taking his hat he left the hall and Mr. Stoddard finished his address.

A Prize Deserved.

Since last winter, there has been considerable correspondence between the Charlevoix Improvement Association and other parties, with a view of locating an extensive hoop factory here. The parties have been here twice, once last visit occurring in June. Matters had not so far shaped themselves that the plant could be considered certainty until last Saturday, when the site was secured. The location is on air acres of land purchased of John Mattes and lies on the Beach of Pine Lake just north of the depot site.

The mill will be built next summer, and will employ from 40 to 60 people, and consume 4,000,000 feet of elm logs per annum.

Opera House.

The Gardner and Richards Comedy Co., that opened at the Opera House last night played to a very good house and gave universal satisfaction. Their rendition of "The Lawyer Detective" was good, and all the parts exceptional fine. A marked feature and one that speaks highly in favor of the company is the intense interest and hearty applause given by those present. Mr. Gardner in the character of Lizer Grump did the funny business in good shape, and showed himself possessed of great talent in that line. Miss Lidia Richards as "Polly Marlin" was pretty and attractive and we predict for her a success in the future. Harry Richards carried the part of John Brandon, the villain in fine style. The balance of the company are fine, and the characters were well carried. The play for to-night will be "The Shadows of a great City, and will be followed up by such melodramas as "Alone in London," etc.

Many people may not have heard of Cross Village, Emmet county, with its 800 population, including Indians and half breeds, but the burglars did and lit on the place Tuesday night, took everything portable from Shurtleff Bros' store and even blew the door of the safe off in their hunt for plunder. They traced the burglars to Manitowoc and captured the ringleader, with some of the stolen property on his person.

Mr. David Ward owner of the Grayling and Charlevoix Railroad, writes that he is looking up a route for this end of his line starting from his grade at a point three miles from the State road thence across to the East Intermediate valley to a connection with the West Michigan at or near Ellsworth or perhaps diverging off to Pine Lake at Ironton. He has found so far a very favorable grade running through magnificent hardwood timber.—East Jordan Enterprise.

The line of the C. & W. M. crosses the property of Fredrick Fleth a few miles west of Petoskey. The railroad company offered $200 for the right of way, but it was refused, Fleth claiming that his property would be damaged to the amount of $2,500. As no settlement could be arrived at, the case was tried Wednesday before Judge Page. The jury after hearing the testimony and viewing the disputed right of way, awarded Mr. Fleth $400 damages.

CHARLEVOIX.

The Coming Metropolis of Northern Michigan.

The Commercial, Marine, and Future Railroad Center of Charlevoix County.

In connection with occurring events, a glance at the map of Charlevoix county, and the cut presented on this page, will convince any observing mind of the truth of the above caption.

When Nature laid out these water ways and planted the forests surrounding them, a circle might have been drawn around the spot where Charlevoix now sits in its beauty, to mark the site of a future city. The valley lying between Lake Michigan and Round Lake, and flanked by level terraces, north and south, cannot be excelled as a natural location for a town.

Charlevoix harbor, but a stone's throw from the great lake, is fitly described by its name — Round Lake. Its deep waters and bold shores make it a perfect harbor. Along its town front are docks, at which, during the season of navigation, there is scarcely an hour that steam-craft are not moored. The harbor has a channel from Lake Michigan of thirteen feet depth, and the same from Round Lake to Pine Lake.

Pine Lake, easily navigable for vessels of twelve and a half feet draft, has nearly 90 miles of coast line. Tributary to its waters is an entire county, and part of another, abounding in the finest quality of hardwood, ash, hemlock and cedar timber.

Michigan has no better soil than is found in the Pine Lake region. Farming here is no longer an experiment. The productiveness and durability of our soil are matters of record.

Of this region Charlevoix is the natural commercial center. Its steadily improving facilities for through lake transit will another year be connected at the foot of Pine Lake with through railroad facilities, in a completed and first class line to Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago, and with the Northern Peninsula.

Already the influence of these growing benefits is felt. Real estate matters are brightening, manufacturing is reviving, and new plants are about to be established. The firm of Nicholls, Lewis & Bates are erecting a large two-story factory, to be operated in conjunction with their already busy plant; two fish-net cork factories are crowded with orders; a first-class roller-process flouring mill is located upon the harbor channel; a machine shop and foundry occupies a convenient location on the harbor; the extensive Petoskey fishing establishment of R. Connable & Sons will be removed soon next spring, to a site already secured. We have three prosperous barber shops, a cigar factory, laundry, and bakery with free delivery; a coal yard and two ship yards, two yacht and boat building establishments, a shingle factory, two livery stables, four hotels,—the Fountain City House, Bridge street house and New Charlevoix; a well-drilled, well-equipped fire department, with a fine Silsby steam fire engine, an effective hand engine and every other necessary auxiliary equipment; a village hall with public assembly room, offices, jail and library; a public park of 19 acres (yet unimproved); two banks, three physicians, first-class dental parlors, four dress-making establishments, news room, depot, and candy factory. Two agricultural implement ware-houses are doing a paying business, a certain indication of agricultural prosperity, and a site has just been purchased for a hoop factory of a capacity for working up 4,000,000 feet of ash logs per annum. Movements are on foot for the establishment of still other manufacturing enterprises.

Charlevoix has twenty-two mercantile establishments of all classes, and all are doing well.

There are few villages of the size that can boast of better streets, or more sidewalks. Charlevoix has always been liberal in public improvements. Upon the terraces overlooking the village, the streets are especially adapted to driving, and with very little more improvement would excel any in Northern Michigan. The county road to the cemetery, south, is already a boulevard rivaling any resort drive in Michigan.

Charlevoix has the finest opera house and the best school building in Northern Michigan. The former seats 700 people, and has every convenience required in a house of its kind. The latter was built at a cost of over $20,000. Especial pride is taken in the public schools. Prof. Henry M. Knox, an educator of large experience and ability is superintendent.

The church societies,—Congregational, Methodist and Baptist all have church edifices, and valuable church property, in the heart of the town. The religious and social status of the town commends it to the attention of high-minded people. the Charlevoix Historical Society, permanently established organization, having for its object, the propagation of literary and social influence, embraces the best people of the town, and from October 1st to May 1st, holds semi-monthly meetings in the parlors of its members.

The resorts of Charlevoix are already famous. At the foot of Pine Lake, overlooking the village and three lakes, is the Charlevoix Summer Resort grounds, with the Belvedere Hotel, and its three score of beautiful cottages, occupying its fine terraces. On the opposite side, the Chicago Resort Company have beautiful grounds with a large club house, and cottages. These resorts have yet large capacity for growth, and it is only a matter of a few years when they will eclipse all others, not excepting the famous Mackinac Island and Bay View. Recently a large plat of land has been acquired near the Chicago resort by C. W. M. officials upon which it is expected a large hotel will be erected. The new Mt. McSauba resort, at which is the highest point of observation in the entire region, is also coming into notice as an attractive spot for resorters. Lots are selling there rapidly.

Facilities for reaching Charlevoix are ample. The steamer Friant makes daily trips between Charlevoix and East Jordan. The steamer Lucile makes two trips per day between Charlevoix and Petoskey; the steamers City of Grand Rapids and Gazelle form a daily line between Traverse City and Mackinac, stopping here both ways; while the fine steamers Soo City, Lawrence, City of Charlevoix and Petoskey, do also a boat almost every day for Milwaukee and Chicago. By the 1st of June next, railroad connection will be added.

The Charlevoix presents unequalled facilities for manufacturing enterprises. The water facilities we have enumerated, with the addition of a railroad shifting a long stretch of navigable shore line presents to capital great opportunities for investment. Our wealth of timber lies almost at the threshold of the great markets of the west, and in navigable accessibility with those of the east. The all important requisites for manufacturing industries are raw material and transportation facilities, both here in abundance.

The Secretary of the Charlevoix Improvement Association, Hon. F. W. Maynard, the President, W. A. Smith, will answer all inquiries on this subject.

OUR INDUSTRIAL ADVANTAGES.

The C. & W. M. Railway, which will be in operation here June 1st, 1891, will have over a mile of dock line along the foot of Pine Lake, more than half of which will be available for manufacturing sites.

Manufactories located along this shore line will have, on the one side navigable waters, and on the other a railroad outlet to Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago.

In anticipation of the boom that will surely come to Charlevoix with the advent of the locomotive, extensive additions are being platted on the plateaus lying north and south of the village, and in close proximity to the future manufacturing locations.

There is here every facility for the manufacture of all manner of hardwood turned goods, furniture or agricultural implements. We have the timber, first-class in quality and abundant in quantity.

Elsewhere in this issue we print a map of the lake region, which will prove at a glance the superiority of Charlevoix as a manufacturing point over all rivals in Northern Michigan.

CHARLEVOIX HARBOR.

Charlevoix harbor is under government care, and every other year receives an appropriation for its improvement.

Its entrance from Lake Michigan and its channel to Pine Lake has a depth of 13 feet. Over $120,000 has been expended upon it by the government, and the plans of its completion contemplate as much more.

Its entrance is in a bay, protected from all winds except westerly and northwesterly, and will when completed, be one of the best harbors on the chain of lakes.

The shipping that passes through Charlevoix harbor may be estimated from the fact that four harbor tugs are kept busy. An important advantage Charlevoix enjoys is longer seasons of navigation than any point in either of the Traverse bays or up-lake towns.

The value of a good harbor cannot be overestimated.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH. A—Chicago Summer Resort Co.

A DRY DOCK WANTED.

The location of Charlevoix harbor makes it a most available point for the location of a dry dock, or other appliances for taking out vessels.

Such an enterprise here would be patronized by steam craft from the straits to Frankfort, to say nothing of the business that would accrue from the large number of vessels trading here.

Vessel men are unanimous in the opinion that such a venture here would prove a profitable one.

OUR REAL ESTATE AGENCIES.

Inquiries for purchaseable farming or timbered lands or village property may be addressed to the Charlevoix real estate agencies of E. H. Green, Moore & Nettleton or Horace S. Harris, all reliable agencies, and all thoroughly posted in the business.

Farming, properly prosecuted, is profitable in Northern Michigan. No part of Michigan can show a better record of crops than the Pine Lake region. The cereals are successful in both yield and quality, and the hardy varieties of fruits average as well as any part of the famous fruit belt of Michigan.

Northern Michigan potatoes and other roots are famous for yield and quality.

Secure a farm near Charlevoix.

L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have sold three tons of the Shirwin-Williams entered and white lead this season.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Five years ago four teachers were sufficient for the work of instruction in the Charlevoix public schools; now seven are employed, and the necessity for a further addition to the corps will soon be imperative. The schools are thoroughly graded, and the curriculum includes a full course in the high school.

From this department three classes have already been graduated. More than half the Alumni are successful teachers, and all the individual members reflect credit upon the Institution. The Superintendent of Public Instruction has recognized the work done here in being of the best class, and the leading Michigan colleges have voluntarily signified their willingness to receive our high school students, giving full credit for all the work covered by their diplomas.

Transportation advantages of this department are attracting a considerable number of young people from the surrounding country who are desirous of securing a better education than the common schools afford.

In 1883 the school house which had done service since the early history of the town, was destroyed by fire, and our citizens with commendable public spirit, realizing the flattering prospects of the town, determined to supply its place with a structure that would meet our growing wants, and do credit to an enterprising community. The present building is beautiful and imposing externally, while its internal arrangement and finish are a surprise to all visitors. Besides class rooms, it contains seven commodious school rooms, including the high school, which is exceptionally large and pleasant. In the basement are furnace rooms, storage and play rooms, all high airy and well lighted.

A strong and healthy educational sentiment has grown up in our community and there is every assurance that future demands for increased advantage, in the public school system will be promptly met.

A large force will be put on the work and it will be here soon after August 1st.

—Mrs. Henry Hatsop, of Kalamazoo, died at her summer cottage on the resort, on Wednesday afternoon. The remains were taken to Kalamazoo on the same night. Mrs. Hatsop was 72 years of age, and was one of the early pioneers of Kalamazoo. Mrs. Hatsop will be missed here, not only by resort people but by our own residents. Mr. and Mrs. Hatsop were the first to arrive and last to leave.

—Grand Rapids Democrat: A. B. Turner of the Eagle, is just now in mourning over the loss of a valuable package. Before leaving for his lake cruise with his the naphtha launch, he had prepared a case of provisions consisting of various brands of chewing mixture to be sent him at Grand Haven. By a mistake the case was lost and only received after much anxiety and telegraphing, with all the important articles missing and their space occupied with common cheese.

—Miss Louise Obermiller, an artist painter in oils, of Toledo, Ohio, is in town. Miss Obermiller is a member of a society having for its object the adjustment of Indian claims against the government, under the treaty of 1836, whereby 678,000 was appropriated for the Indians of Northern Michigan. She is securing the signatures of the Indians of this region to papers setting forth the facts in the case. She pays all the expenses of the prosecution of these claims, and proposes to push the matter. The Indians claim, (and the claim is substantiated by Louis Miller, of this place, who was "Indian Farmer" at the time the treaty was negotiated,) that there is a large amount yet due them.

—Resorters are coming fast, and lots of new ones.

—Pitcher & Pickett's Celebrated Colored Comedy and Concert Company will give one of their pleasing entertainments at Lewis' Grand Opera House to-night. This company have been playing to crowded houses all over the State and are bound to please. Go and see them and witness a true portrayal of colored life on the plantations down south. Have Picket, the greatest black-face comedian on the road, will give his celebrated character impersonations.

—Grand Rapids Telegram-Herald: W. McLean of the firm of J. H. McLane & Co., railroad contractors, is home for the Sabbath. Speaking of the northern extension of the C. & W. M. railroad, at which they are at work he said: "the work is progressing very favorably. The work of grading going on at the rate of about a mile a day, and the ballasting follows right after it. We shall start tracking on the branch to Elk Rapids first and by the time we have finished, the main line will be ready. About August 20 we shall begin tracking from Charlevoix to Petoskey. We have about 1,000 men at work. They are mostly Northern Michigan Swedes and Hungarians, and are good workmen. We shall surely have the job completed in the spring, at the time stipulated in the contract, and if we have favorable weather, may possibly complete it in the fall.

Death of Mrs. C. M. Wood.

Mrs. Abigail Wood, wife of George M. Wood, of Advance, died Thursday night last, at her home in Eveline.

Mrs. Wood was a pioneer of Charlevoix County, having removed with her family, to Eveline from Sheboygan Falls, Wis., in 1865. Mrs. Wood had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church from her girlhood, and died with a well grounded faith in her Savior.

Mrs. Wood leaves a husband, to whom she had been married nearly 44 years, four sons and three daughters, namely: E., and H. D., of this place, James E., of Chicago, J. E., and Misses Emma and Nina, who lived with their parents, and Mrs. H. Halliday, of Oswego, N. Y.

The funeral was held at the home of the deceased Saturday, and was largely attended, the Methodist pastor of Boyne City officiating.

The bereaved relatives request us to convey their grateful thanks for the many tokens of sympathy extended to them.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER IV.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

Job Wonder looked down at Joe with a curious twinkle in his eye. "Joe was such a little mike," he said to himself.

"I reckon now you don't know much like as not you can't cook a turkey?"
